

2021

Invar

Kai Szulborski

Follow this and additional works at: <https://commons.und.edu/floodwall-magazine>

Recommended Citation

Szulborski, Kai (2021) "Invar," Floodwall Magazine: Vol. 2 : Iss. 3 , Article 13.
Available at: <https://commons.und.edu/floodwall-magazine/vol2/iss3/13>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by UND Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Floodwall Magazine by an authorized editor of UND Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact und.common@library.und.edu.

Invar

Kai Szulborski

Kai Szulborski is a graduate student, English GTA, and writer at UND. He first tried writing after he fell in love with a badly written gothic space-opera about a small blue ghoul who uses the soul of Charles Dickens to power his giant hammer-wielding robot. Now, he mostly writes about giant sad women crying in deserts. He is currently working very hard to accelerate the process of entropy in order to eliminate all stars in the universe. That way, he can sleep in as long as he wants.

After Wilfred Owen's "Futility"

The clay cannot claim itself
 For all its import and purpose, inside of a circle
 The clay cannot claim itself
 If it sits idly by, dissolved by the sun
 Grown cold in harsh politeness and three feelings
 The first is letting go of itself; to tunnel underground
 Here the clay will mire and surge until it breaks peace
 The second is thunder, coming both from underground and inside of the clay
 The thunder is timid and it cannot stir the fire of the sun
 Asking questions of the half-sown field
 The third, and final, is the sleep of the earth
 The sun asks of its clay to break the sleep
 But in thunder, and the tunnels below the snow,
 In the frozen core of the Earth
 The sun cannot reach and the beams cannot break sleep
 And the cold star which hailed the seeds from the starship
 Has vanished back past the planets
 And hidden behind the moon.