Proto-Binukid-Dibabaon

D. S. Stark

In the year 1610 the first linguistic treatise of a Malayo-Polynesian language was produced. This was Arte y Reglas de la Lengua Tagala, a grammar of Tagalog. Since that beginning, the melanesian and polynesian areas have been a fertile and productive field for comparative linguists. The works of Conant, Dempwolff, and Dyen are representative of the products of the twentieth century comparativists in this field.

This paper attempts to reconstruct a proto-language whose reflexes are Binukid and Dibabaon-Mandayan, both of the Malayo-Polynesian family, and both spoken on the island Mindanao of the Philippines. Binukid, with at least twelve thousand speakers, is spoken in the central and northern section of the province of Bukidnon. Dibabaon-Mandayan is spoken in the upper Agusan River area of the northern Davao and southern Augusan provinces. The vocabulary items employed in this reconstruction were gathered during the period 1953 – 1956 by William Atherton (Binukid) and Jan Forster and Myra Lou Barnard (Dibabaon-Mandayan) under the auspices of the Summer Institute of Linguistics.

The methodology used in this reconstruction is that given by Pike, Hoenigswald, and Hockett. In this paper, reflexes will be listed in the following order: Binukid: Dibabaon-Mandayan. Abbreviations used are PBD = Proto-Binukid-Dibabaon; Bin = Binukid, and Dib = Dibabaon-Mandayan. An asterisk (*) preceding a cited form indicates a reconstructed proto-form.

APPENDIX.

The following correspondences could not be fit neatly into any of the foregoing. Nor does it seem logical to reconstruct separate protophonemes to handle these data. In all but one instance the correspondence is unique. One is a borrowing from Spanish. Rather than class them all as borrowings or, worse, sweep them under the rug, I frankly list them as at present unexplained data. Possible a larger corpus of material from both languages would resolve these to some extent.
