*94th COMMENCEMENT
THE UNIVERSITY
OF NORTH DAKOTA
HYSLOP SPORTS CENTER
2:00 P.M., May 15, 1983*

Readers of Grand Forks newspapers in September 1884 saw this notice: The University of North Dakota will open for the reception of students, Monday, September 8, at 9:30 a.m. A full attendance on the opening day is desired / Signed: Webster Merrifield / Secretary of Faculty

THE TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE had created the University more than a year before, and when that notice appeared the single building on the open prairie west of Grand Forks was almost finished.

A paradox familiar to all North Dakotans is that the state is, by turns, nurturing and harsh, lush and barren. So it was in the environment in which North Dakota's first and largest university grew to maturity over its first century. In its first two decades, UND weathered the threat of abolition by a governor, plague and isolation. The students had to overcome the handicaps of poor preparation and inadequate housing.

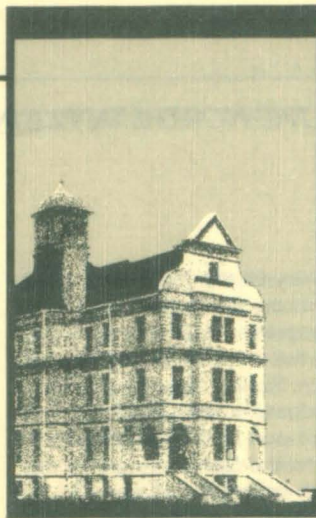

The institution survived, however, and eventually prospered because of its great resource: people dedicated to making higher education available to the citizens of North Dakota. Those people included faculty members, citizens of the state and the students, who made up in diligence what they lacked in preparation.

From the first, events of UND's early years were remarkable. The University was born when George Walsh, a Grand Forks-based promoter of various schemes during the Dakota Territory boom of the 1880s, introduced in the territorial legislature at Yankton "A bill for an Act Locating the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, N.D., and Providing for the Government thereto." Or so the document was titled; Walsh was rushing to seize the prize for Grand Forks before delegates from Fargo and Jamestown could make their move.

To pre-empt their efforts, he simply attached the title to some blank sheets of paper and hastily introduced the "bill." By the time the document came up for detailed consideration, he had drafted and inserted its text. "The Jamestown member was very much disappointed," Walsh later recalled.

The measure was passed by the legislature and was signed into law on Feb. 27, 1883.

"A long and showy procession" came by train and carriages from the city of Grand Forks on Oct. 2, 1883, to attend the ceremony of the laying of the cornerstone for the University's first structure, "Main Building." Located near the English Coulee about a mile west of Grand Forks on a 20-acre tract donated as a site for the campus under the terms of the act of organization, this building originally housed the entire University. Living rooms for the faculty, dormitories for the students, a dining room, a classroom, a library and a museum were all contained in the three-story structure.

There is ample reason to question whether Dakota Territory was ready for a university in its northern regions. There were but three high schools in all of what would soon become North Dakota. Founding of UND followed so closely the first settlement of the area that, of the 79 students who enrolled during the University's first year, none was a native North Dakotan. None was found ready for college study, so University-level instruction was deferred for a year and all 79 were placed in various preparatory programs for instruction at high school level or lower. At the end of the first year, only 24 students remained. (Whatever the reasons for the high attrition, exorbitant cost was not one of them: the only fee was $3.50 per week, charged to students who lived in the University building.)

A CENTURY ON THE NORTHERN PLAINS

IN HIS BOOK, "University of the Northern Plains," former UND history professor Louis G. Geiger recorded the impressions of Vernon P. Squires on arriving at the campus shortly before the turn of the century. Squires was joining the faculty fresh from graduate school at the University of Chicago; upon arriving in Grand Forks, he walked out to the University along the railroad track, and was impressed by the "loneliness and barrenness" he felt as he approached the University's "three plain buildings" on a "twenty-acre lot in the midst of a great wheat field."

There were a few tiny trees and a huge woodpile, and the janitor's cow grazed on the campus. Geiger wrote: "Assigned temporarily . . . to a small bedroom off one of the classrooms, (Squires) discovered to his consternation that it was infested by bedbugs.

He spent this night in a rocking chair with his feet propped on the window sill: 'I had a variety of thoughts . . . (and) really wondered how long I could endure life in such a place.' "

Two events began to change his mind, however: he was assigned to a cleaner bedroom, and he met his students, who he found "rather unsophisticated, but whose ability and character steadily grew on me. . . ." Indeed they must have; Squires stayed on until his death in 1930. Other able and well-trained teachers in those early years held degrees from Yale, Cornell, Oxford, the University of Virginia and the University of Leipzig.

An entering freshman girl from the same period revealed in her recollection a first impression dramatically different from Squire's, expressing the shining opportunity the University held out to young men and women raised on the state's vast,

THE CENTENNIAL YEAR

The University of North Dakota Centennial celebration began in February with a full week of activity on campus which featured a four-day academic symposium. Internationally known thinkers such as Mortimer J. Adler, Max Lerner and Elie Wiesel joined students and faculty to consider the great issues of the past, present and future.

The year-long Centennial observance which began on Founders Day, Feb. 27, is financed from non-state funds and consists of five main parts.

One involves telling as many people as possible about the Centennial through the mass media, use of an official Centennial logo, production of the 24-minute film "University of North Dakota: The New Century," and other communication methods. Another effort will bring visitors to the campus for special events during the year to celebrate with faculty and students as they explore the significance of the University's past and its hopes for the future. A third method takes the Centennial "on the road" to dozens of birthday parties around the state and nation. A fourth involves special creative projects, such as the commissioning of original music and art, and the writing of a new history, "A Century on the Northern Plains: The University of North Dakota at 100" (available at the University Bookstore). And the fifth thrust consists of the $25 million

thinly populated plains: "I shall never forget how bright and cheery the lights gleamed through the windows as we drove up to the buildings; nor how long the halls seemed when we entered; nor how strange and lost I felt when shown into the large parlor to wait for the preceptress."

This was the University's most important mission: to provide a chance for exposure to a world of ideas and education beyond that which was available on the farms or in the small towns where the young North Dakotans were raised, and to which most of them returned.

ONE OF UND'S MOST IMPORTANT early services was the establishment of a system of high school instruction in the state and the training of teachers for those schools. As testing of aspiring students by the University had shown, education beyond the elementary level desperately needed improvement in North Dakota. The University, as the state's only institution equipped to train high school teachers, assumed a leading role in a campaign to improve the school system. Webster Merrifield, the University's third president and the first to truly shape its future, took a leading role in the creation of an improved system and was in charge of evaluating high schools for the state for most of the 18 years he served as president. At the time of his retirement, he was honored as the "father of the state high school system."

Among the early threats to the University was a deadly outbreak of typhoid, which swept Grand Forks during the winter of 1893-94. More than a hundred residents of the city died, and three University students lost their lives.

The most serious threat to the young University, however, was financial. It received only marginal funding in the early 1890s, culminating in 1894

UND Centennial Campaign, being led by the UND Alumni Association and Foundation.

Among major events remaining on the schedule are the Centennial Alumni Days Celebration on campus, May 25-27, featuring reunions of UND's oldest graduates; the "Festival of Ethnic Musical Traditions in North Dakota" on campus, June 17-19; the Summer Institute of Linguistics Centennial Program on campus, June 27-29; the Jarrett Memorial Golf Classic and Sioux Rendezvous Reunion of all former athletic letterwinners on campus, July 13-16; the joint village of Medora-UND Centennial birthday party in Medora, Aug. 5-7; the 34th annual national meeting of the American Institute of Biological Sciences on campus, Aug. 7-12; the re-creation of the laying of the cornerstone of the University's first building, Oct. 2; Homecoming 1983, featuring special alumni reunions and Centennial events, Oct. 6-9; Christmas Open House at the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center, Dec. 10-11; a special Broadway musical production, "South Pacific," staged with guest artists at the Chester Fritz Auditorium, Jan. 20-22; and closing ceremonies at the Founders Day Banquet, Feb. 23, 1984.

Further information on the Centennial observance is available by writing to the UND Office of University Relations, Box 8143, University Station, Grand Forks, North Dakota 58202. ■ when Gov. Roger Allin, moving to cut state expenses across the board in the wake of a national financial panic, approved only enough of the University's budget to pay a janitor and maintain the buildings. Nothing was provided for faculty salaries. Other state schools and colleges faced similar difficulties; the result, in the case of UND, was a remarkable demonstration of widespread support for the University.

When the dimensions of the crisis became clear, a statewide drive for voluntary contributions to keep the University open was announced. Citizens, businesses and institutions contributed more than $30,000, a third of the sum donated by faculty members who gave up 25 percent of their salaries. The University of Montana twice offered to hire President Merrifield, the second time also promising to hire his entire faculty. He refused.

AFTER THE TURN OF THE CENTURY, state support resumed at adequate levels as the economy improved. Other hard times lay ahead: during the Great Depression, some 40 male students were housed in "Camp Depression," a cluster of 10 converted railroad cabooses set up on campus. Another student lived in a tarpaper shanty at the edge of the campus.

Set up in 1933, Camp Depression offered housing for 46 students at a time. They paid rent by working for the University four hours a week. Living rules were strict, and the students cooked their own meals. Townspeople frequently brought Sunday dinners for "the boys."

But by 1900, with the University assured of its own continued existence, attention turned to strengthening the academic program and making it more responsive to the needs of the state.

In addition to instruction, the University's mission soon grew to include research and serve to the people of North Dakota and to others beyond the state's borders. This remains an essential part of the University's function today and for the future.

The University of North Dakota was the only institution of higher education in the state to be originally established as a university, with all of the implications of that title. The University has served as a capstone for the entire system of public education in the state, and from its earliest year has embraced all levels of higher education — undergraduate, professional and graduate — and maintained an active program of research and service. Through the experiences of nearly 10 decades, the University has created a tradition in instruction, research and service which has served as a model for other institutions. Consistent with the intent of the founding legislators, the University has served as a standard-bearer and leader for higher education in the state.

AS IT MOVED INTO THE DECADE of the 1980s, more than 130,000 students had passed through its hallways. It has grown from the first year to a student body of 11,103 students and a faculty and research staff of 630. The main campus area of 472 acres contains 207 buildings with a total space of four million square feet. Institutional diversity and comprehensiveness is reflected by the fact that instruction is offered through 65 departments organized into 100 colleges and schools. This diversity has been one of the major strengths of the University, again as mandated by its founders, and provides unique opportunities for teaching and learning to prepare students for an ever-changing society.

The University has provided North Dakota with many of its governors, U.S. senators and representatives, state Supreme Court justices, federal and state judges and many other state officials. Many of the state's merchants, farmers and educators are UND alumni. UND has touched the lives of thousands of state residents who have never enrolled or even seen the campus.

Proud of its past, but at the end of its first century still young as a university's age is measured, the University of North Dakota retains much of the optimism and vitality inherited from the pioneers who founded and supported it. ■

In academic circles, the mace of the University president symbolizes acceptance of leadership.

THE UNIVERSITY MACE

The mace or heavy staff, in earlier days, was borne by or carried before a magistrate or other dignitary as an ensign of his authority. A mace is placed as the symbol of royal authority on the treasury table in the British House of Commons at the opening of each session and removed at its close.

In the U.S. House of Representatives, it is a rather plain staff mounted in a marble pedestal at the right hand of the speaker.

At University of North Dakota commencements, the mace is carried by the grand marshal. The UND mace was made from the oak of Old Main, the University's first building, by Alpha Tau, honorary industrial arts fraternity.

This group also made from the same source the batons with school colors attached which are carried by two other marshals.

O Beautiful for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain
For purple mountain majesties
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea.

AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL

Hail to thee, O Alma Mater!
Hail to thee with heart and tongue!
Pride we feel and love yet greater,
While we raise our grateful song,
Home of lofty thought and learning,
Beacon O'er our western land,
Shrine whence still the ever burning
Torch is passed from hand to hand.

ACADEMIC COSTUMES

Academic costumes are related to two garments, a type of robe and a hood or head covering, worn in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries for warmth in unheated buildings. Special costumes to distinguish academic persons were first used in the fourteenth century at Oxford and Cambridge. Differences among such costumes came to symbolize two things: an academic degree and the institution which awarded it.

Academic garb has been worn in the United States since colonial times. In 1895 an Intercollegiate Code was adopted to encourage standard designs and usage. This Code was reviewed by a special committee of the American Council on Education in 1932 and again in 1960 when minor revisions were made.

An academic costume consists of three items: the gown, the hood, and the Oxford cap or mortar board. Gowns are easily distinguished by their sleeves. Bachelors' gowns have long, pointed sleeves. Sleeves of a master's gown are oblong panels reaching nearly to the hem of the gown. Each sleeve has a small arc cut out near the bottom, and a slit at the elbow through which the wearer extends an arm. A doctor's gown has full and bellshaped sleeves which carry three horizontal bars; it also has a velvet panel extending around the neck and down to the front of the hem. The velvet trim is usually black, but may be of the color associated with the degree.

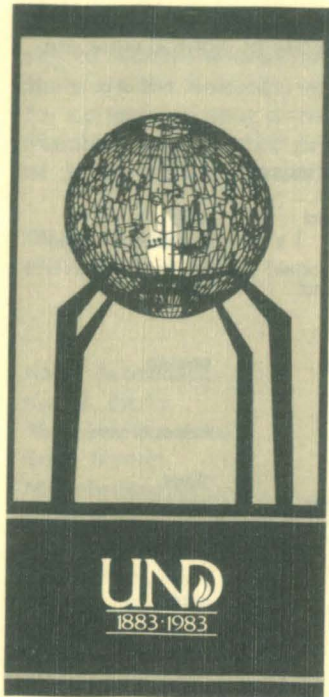

Hoods for bachelors and masters are similar. The former are shorter and are trimmed with a narrower velvet band than the latter. Hoods for bachelors degrees are not normally used. A doctor's hood is four feet long, has a broad, rounded base, and is trimmed with a five-inch velvet border. The color of the trim of a hood identifies the wearer's degree; that of the lining, the institution which conferred the degree. Hoods given by the University of North Dakota are lined in pink with a green shevron.

The cap is essentially the same for all degrees, except that doctors and university and college presidents may wear a gold tassel.

Colors of tassels associated with various degrees now used at the University of North Dakota are as follows:

University College	gray
College of Arts and Sciences	white
College of Business and Public Administration	drab (subdued orange)
Center for Teaching and Learning	blue
School of Engineering and Mines	orange
College of Fine Arts	russet brown

FOUR-YEAR HONORS PROGRAM

RICHARD HAMPSTEN, HONORS COORDINATOR

The following students have met the objectives of the University of North Dakota's four-year HONORS PROGRAM, a program designed to broaden and enrich the undergraduate curriculum. They have passed sophomore and senior comprehensive examinations, and have been certified for graduation by the Honors Committee of the University. A substantial segment of their University training has been pursued in honor courses, tutorials and colloquia, and they have done independent research in their major fields of interest.
