STATEMENT ON FACULTY RESPONSIBILITIES

Along with academic freedom and tenure, all faculty members recognize certain concomitant responsibilities to their students, their colleagues, to the University, and to the State and broader community.

- I. To students, faculty members have a responsibility for
 - A. Keeping abreast of current developments in their disciplines, continuously updating course content, improving the method of instruction, and regularly evaluating the effectiveness of their instruction.
 - B. Maintaining in their classrooms and elsewhere an intellectual and attitudinal environment in which students are stimulated to learn, to ask questions, and to explore alternative approaches to problems.
 - C. Respecting students as persons, being concerned about their progress, and being willing to hear their points of view without prejudice.
 - D. Informing students at the beginning of each semester of the objectives of each course and organizing the method of instruction and time allocation so as to meet those objections.
 - E. Informing students as early as possible concerning term paper and other requirements for the course and the basis on which grades will be determined. Examinations and papers which are used for determining a course grade should be available to students for inspection and discussion. Students' grades should be based on recognized academic standards. Students should also be informed early in the course of the policy concerning attendance.
 - F. Holding classes and examinations as scheduled and, in the event of necessary absence, informing students in advance of changes in schedule and making suitable alternative arrangements.
 - G. Being readily available to students for individual conferences relating to course work or other matters of concern and interest to students. Faculty should post a schedule indicating times when they will be available for consultation.
