ALUMNI REVIEW

VOLUME XXXVII

GRAND FORKS, NORTH DAKOTA - August 17, 1959

NUMBER 2

Report from the President

TO OUR ALUMNI:

I welcome this opportunity to report briefly on developments that herald a new day for your alma mater. During recent years there has been a growing realization of the interdependence of universities and their alumni. You must feel better when your alma mater gains renown because some of it rubs off on you. On the other hand, whenever any graduate of the University attains special recognition the University is proud to acknowledge him as an alumnus and to bask in the reflected glory of his success.

The 1959 session of the North Dakota legislature has declared its faith in the future of higher education by making the largest biennial appropriation in history for operation of the institutions of higher education. In addition, funds were appropriated for the University to build a new administration building, and to make other plant improvements.

Plans for the Chester Fritz Library are well under way. We visited some twenty new libraries around the country for ideas before the planning was started. We have consulted a number of librarians for suggestions. We want this building standing, as a library should, at the heart of the University, to be carefully planned for the present and for future expansion. We expect to start construction some time next April.

Mr. Donald Pearce is our new librarian. A native of England and a graduate of the University of London, Mr. Pearce has had a good educa-

Here is the putting green in front on the Ledge at Camelback Inn, where the tenth annual Alumni Reunion will be held in December.

Prepare for 10th Annual Reunion

Dear UNDers:

I'm Snowball, the silly mule who writes all the stuff that goes out about Camelback Inn.

Camelback is a resort on the sun drenched desert 10 miles from Phoenix, Ariz., where each year former UND students and graduates gather for a reunion. This year is the 10th such conclave and the dates are Dec. 6 to 13.

Lloyd Stone, Alumni Director at the University, got the idea for this shindig years ago and it has been so popular that the University of Minnesota has copied it and they have a similar function at Camelback in January.

Another school, Scripps College (for girls) of Claremont, Calif., also has a reunion at the Inn in October. So you see, even though I'm only a poor old mule I keep close to the educational pulse and I may get a degree yet from Lloyd.

You might ask who comes to these reunions? Well, last year 14 states and Canada were represented and this year reservations have already been received from 10 states but Canada hasn't been heard from. However, Hawaii is in the fold with Dr. Min Hin Li coming for the first time. Dr. Li is always remembered at these reunions because every year for 10 years he has sent gobs of orchids from his homeland, one for each lady at the banquet. We imagine that Min will bring them with him, perhaps right in with his colored sports shirts because they don't weigh much.

Jim and Ethel Douglas have never missed one of these affairs from New York and Herb Treichler and fair lady are coming from Texas. Ray Richards always comes from Tulsa, Okla. Closer at hand is Ed O'Connor, the charleston champion, who with Lafe Ludwig of Los Angeles can still dance rings around any former UND student, regardless of age.

There are about 175 or so expected for this reunion,

Report

(Continued from Page 1) tional background and experience for the job. For the past three years he was associated with the Ohio State University library.

The new chemistry building is being planned and we hope construction can be started next spring.

Plans for the new administration building should be under way very soon. We want to plan for maximum usefulness of the building for administrative purposes for a long time in the future. It will be dedicated to the founders and past board members. Thus, we shall honor all those who have given so much of themselves to bring the University to where it is today.

The legislature provided the funds to remodel the basement of the old commons for the use of the Home Economics Department, and work there is under way. The project that was started last year to renew the electrical distribution system will be completed and new paving will improve the approach to the campus.

Our Summer Science Institute and the Guidance Institute enable the University to serve the teachers of the area and upgrade the quality of the work being done in our schools. Next year we shall have forty science teachers enrolled in the Academic Year Institute supported by a $250 000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

Many research grants enable the University to extend its research program and thus not only are we involved in extending the boundaries of knowledge but we are able to attract and hold better teachers who recognize the importance of research as well as good teaching in building the prestige and service of the University.

I hope I shall be able to visit many alumni meetings this year. It is most encouraging to have Lloyd Stone reminding me from time to time that the one question alumni ask more often than any other is: "How can we become more active participants in the progress of the University?"

The following specific answers to that question apply to every alumnus, parent and friend:

1. Attend alumni meetings and reunions; come back for homecoming, commencement, or whenever you can; write and keep the alumni office informed about you so that we can help you keep up to date on what is happening on the campus.

2. Never hesitate to show your pride in your University. It is a good University and it is growing in academic prestige and importance. As you follow progress on the campus with pride you can also be an official ambassador representing the University to your own local community. An alumnus who takes a lively interest in the affairs of the University and who helps promote and stimulate interest among other alumni is accepting an important responsibility for the advancement of higher education today.

3. Take a little time out now and then to talk with your friends, high school students, even your own children, about the University and its advantages. Too many people fail to understand that ours is a good climate for study. and we do enjoy our winters as well as the summertime. The University provides a complete program at a cost that is far below most schools. Yet, accommodations are comparable to what you will find in the best universities in the country.

4. One other thing we shall need your help with in the years ahead is placement. Our graduates have made outstanding records after graduation and they have no difficulty getting jobs. However, older alumni can help new graduates find positions and get started as active new members of the Alumni Association. —George Starcher

CORRECTION

A story in the July Alumni Review on the Cal-Dak Co., inadvertently o mitted the names of two University graduates who, with Lloyd Nelson, 1932, were founders of the organization. They are Frank Walsh, executive vice president of the Manufacturing Division, a director and stockholder; and Ed O'Connor, a corporate secretary and legal counsel, director and stockholder.

In the last issue of the Review the pictures of Ellis L. Hatt and Junius A. Holte were shown above the wrong captions.

Reunion

(Continued from Page 1) which is expected to be the largest in history. Many former students now come for a week, taking their summer or fall vacation at this time. At the price they find they can't miss. Everyone likes a bargain and this is it. For $13.50 daily one can gurgle over three terrific meals and have a room in one of the lavish bungalows. This price also includes a banquet, dance, cocktail party at the Jack and Louise Stewart home and many other features.

There isn't an overshoe or snow shovel anywhere around the Inn as we haven't had a bit of snow since Arizona came into the union in 1914.

If you come, bring your golf clubs, tennis rackets, swimming suit, informal clothes (only) and a good appetite.

We have literature about the Inn which we'll cheerfully send you. Incidentally, if you can only spend a few days at the Inn, the big moments of the reunion are Friday and Saturday, Dec. 11 and 12, so try to be here for those days especially.

I'll be glad to see you.
Sincerely,
Your Desert Correspondent
