Wherever the four winds blow, there'll be congregations of UND alumni in the months just ahead.

From New York to Los Angeles, from San Francisco to Phoenix, Nodaks will be gathering to get the word on latest developments from the campus and to relive their own fond memories of days spent along the English Coulee.

With many sessions still awaiting final arrangements as to date and place, "definite" gatherings have been lined up as follows:

$656,000 for Science Big Federal Grants Go to Two Projects

Federal grants totaling $656,300 for two widely varying projects have been awarded to UND.

They are:

$402,000 to the UND School of Medicine from the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare to add three floors to the Ireland Cancer Research Laboratory.

$254,300 from the National Science Foundation to support another academic year Science Institute at UND in 1962-63

The Cancer Research Facilities grant is the second largest ever received by the University, being topped only by Chester Fritz's 1958 gift for a new library. The award was made to Dr. W. E. Cornatzer, chairman of the Biochemistry Department and Ireland Laboratory director.

The Science Institute grant is the largest ever made to a North Dakota higher education institution for a teaching project. Awarded as the result

Ireland Laboratory To Expand Research

Dr. Cornatzer, as principal investigator of Ireland Laboratory cancer research projects, declared that "without the initial grant of Mrs. Bertha Ireland and the original bequest of her late husband, the Ireland Laboratory would not be a reality."

He expressed appreciation for financial support stating that it will make the laboratory "one of the best in the Northwest. The new expansion will further develop research work at the School of Medicine enabling it to take its place in experimental investigation of cancer and growth," he said.

President G. W. Starcher said the grant will permit enlargement of the space and functions of the Ireland Laboratory. "Through the concerted efforts of Dr. Cornatzer, Dean Harwood, Dean Hamre, and members of the medical school staff and all those concerned in Washington, we shall have more space to carry on research and teaching and thus be able to serve a basic need thereby enhancing the prestige of our School of Medicine," he added.

Dr. Cornatzer submitted application for expansion of the present one-story Ireland Laboratory in January, 1961. The three-floor addition will provide 15,000 square feet of floor space in an open laboratory arrangement. Each floor will have 10 rooms and a central laboratory bench with five chemical hoods.

Architects will soon begin working on drawings and bids are expected to be let this winter. Construction will begin in the spring of 1962. The addition will be of Tudor Gothic design to match buildings of the School of Medicine. It will be air-conditioned and an elevator will be located in the south end of the building. The laboratory, adjoined to the south side of the Medical School building, is the first building on the University campus to be used solely for research work.

The Ireland Laboratory was established by Mrs. Guy L. Ireland of Grand Forks as a memorial to her late husband, a prominent Northwest businessman who died of cancer in 1952. The laboratory was constructed with a $75,000 gift from Mrs. Ireland in 1957, $74,190 from the National Institute of Health, $50,000 from the North Dakota Medical Center and $810 from research grants. Construction began in April, 1958, and the laboratory was dedicated March 10, 1959.

More than 90 research publications of the UND biochemistry department have been released since it was first established in 1951, Cornatzer said. More than $807,000 in research grants and $79,177 in research fellowships has been received by the department since that time, he added.

Twenty-eight full and parttime employees are presently engaged in biochemistry research at UND, Cornatzer said. Salaries of three of these fulltime staff members are paid by non-state funds.

Mrs. Ireland said she was "very pleased to hear that the laboratory has earned this deserving recognition."
