WORK PAPERS
of the
Summer Institute of Linguistics
University of North Dakota

Volume IX

PREFACE

The Summer Institute of Linguistics, University of North Dakota Branch, takes pleasure in presenting this ninth volume in the Work Papers series. As stated in earlier volumes, these papers are presented in pre-publication form with the hope, first, that text materials will be preserved for languages to which researchers might not otherwise have access; second, that the principles and procedures elaborated herein will prove both useful and stimulating to further thought; and third, that the resulting criticism and suggestions will lead to the improvement of subsequent manuscript drafts.

Part I of this volume contains new articles ranging in subject from field methods to intonation, and from ethnology to dialectology. Part II consists of language texts elicited by advanced students in the course of their informant work. A supplement contributed by Austin Hale, Lecturer at the Institute, is a major contribution to the exposition of the transformational grammar model.

Since these papers are preliminary drafts, no public reference to them or quotation from them should be made without prior permission from the respective authors.
