A Dream of Future Years.

[Written for THE STUDENT.]

It was one of those soft, balmy, perfumed days in May—one of those days when Nature is at peace with the world and when she gives to her children a beautiful picture of an awakening summer. The singing of birds, the rippling of water, the rustling of leaves blended harmoniously together.

About 2:30 in the afternoon two girls left the hall and started for a walk down the road. Myrtle carried her history with her, but Fannie did not seem studiously inclined. She told Myrtle that tomorrow she had two subjects off and that she meant to enjoy herself today. They crawled under a wire fence and walked through a meadow where there was an abundance of violets, blue, white and yellow. After gathering a large bunch of these spring beauties, they walked on a little further until they came to the bank of the coulee. They found a comfortable nook under a shady tree and sat down.

"Really, Fannie, I mustn't waste another minute," said Myrtle, "I simply can't remember these old dates, and he is so particular about them too; so don't talk to me any more, until I say you may." "All right, Myrtle," Fannie answered, "I'm glad my conscience is clear in regard to my history. I'll try to keep quiet for a while." Myrtle resolutely took up her book, while Fannie, deprived of her usual pastime—talking—amused herself by throwing pebbles at the fishes and was delighted to see them dart through the water like so many flashes of sunbeams.

The air was so soft, the sky so blue and everything so still, that finally Fannie leaned her head against the tree, shaded her eyes by pulling her hat lower down over her forehead and gave herself up to happy thoughts. Foremost among these was the thought of her dainty, new organdie which she was to wear for the first time to the reception Saturday evening. It was to be worn over pale blue and Fannie knew how charming that color was to her and how well it set off her fresh, white complexion and her light golden hair. She knew that Robert would be even more attentive than usual, and how could anyone fail to be happy with such a prospect in view.

But her thoughts began to grow confused and finally she fell asleep and was removed to an entirely different scene. She had just come out of one of the side doors of Davis Hall, passed down the steps and out on the walk. The building she is leaving is a very spacious one, made of white brick. It furnishes a happy home for some five or six hundred girls whose gay laughter and happy voices may be heard at all times during the day. The hall has numerous balconies and porticos, which give it an air of cozy comfort and, withal, an air of elegance. It is shaded by some fine old trees, and in front of it is a wide, green, neatly kept lawn.

Fannie passes on down the paved walk, past the Science building, with its laboratories, each well stocked with the necessary apparatus; past the gymnasium buildings.

A short distance from the gymnasiums, she sees a long stone building from which come sounds of band music, marching, commands, and clashing of guns and swords. Soon a long line of young men march out from it and walk across the campus in perfect order. Tradition has it that one of the presidents of the University spent several of the best years of his life in petitioning the senate for a drill hall. Here Fannie sees the results of his effort.

She goes past the medical building, a new department but a very flourishing one. It stands a few yards back from the street-car track where the swelling hum and buzz of the cars can be heard every few minutes as they go to and from Grand Forks, carrying a crowd of students every trip.

She turns to the right and sees, a few steps ahead of her, the building devoted to the study of law. A short distance from that she comes to the music hall, with its supply of musical instruments of every description.

To the left she sees a large, red brick building, very imposing looking, to and from which are going crowds of young men, and it is not hard to recognize this as Thomas Hall. Some distance off she sees two smaller white brick buildings, which, they say, in years past, were sufficiently large to hold all the students who attended the University of North Dakota. Fannie cannot see how such an increase in the resources and accommodations of the University can have occurred, but such is surely the case.

The building she is passing now seems to her to be the crowning glory of the place. She thinks of what her mother has told her of the library when she was attending the University. Then, it occupied one room in the building which answered for recitation rooms, boys' dormitory, laboratories, museum, chapel, cloak rooms and drill hall. She laughs to herself as she thinks of her mother's graphic description of how the girls were forced to run the gauntlet every evening, and were never sure when they started down the line of cadets that they would not be run through with a bayonet before they reached the way of escape.

Fannie wonders how it was ever possible to do any intelligent reading in that library, and she contrasts the old one with the elegant stone structure near at hand. She thinks of it with its noiseless swinging doors, its highly polished floors; its rooms well lighted in the day time by carefully arranged windows, and in the evening, by electric lights, of which each compartment has a plentiful supply. She thinks of the lightly-treading, low-voiced ushers; of the several accurate and courteous librarians; and of the unlimited number of books at the command of the students, and she gives a sigh of satisfaction that things are as they are.

As she stands on the beautifully shaded walk, lost in thought, she is joined by Robert. She does not seem to be greatly surprised, nor to act as if this were an unusual occurrence, and they walk away together. They cross the soft, velvety campus, and go through the meadow a short distance until they come to the clear, shining lake, with one of its little row-boats fastened to the bank and riding on the waves as if impatient to be free. The sight is so suggestive that Robert easily persuades Fannie to let him row her across the lake.

The soft dip of the oars in the water, the lazy, gliding motion of the boat, and the cool, fresh breeze blowing around them make them feel that life is a very blissful thing after all. At least, Robert thinks so as he looks at Fannie with her cheeks pink with pleasure and excitement, her eyes glowing, and stray curls of hair blowing softly about her face. Indeed, he feels that life without her would be but a dreary waste, but with her, this blissful feeling would always remain.

As time, place, and surroundings are all favorable, he determines to find out his fate. We need not go into details, but it will suffice to know that Fannie's sentiments seemed to coincide with those of Robert, and the boat-ride proved to be a very interesting one.

But Fannie is recalled from her very pleasant dreams by the sound of voices near her. She rouses herself, and sees that Myrtle has thrown aside her book, and seems to have concentrated her mind on a more interesting subject, Will Rowan, a clever young man of the Junior class.

However, her attention is soon claimed by a third person standing near her, and blushing at the remembrance of her recent dream, she recognizes in him its subject, Robert Linton.

The latter part of Fannie's dream was not very long in coming to pass. A year from the next August, one of the local papers gave this announcement:

LINTON-EDGELEY, at the home of the bride's parents, by Rev. L. G. Williams, Miss Fannie Edgely, of this place, to R. M. Linton of Grand Forks. Both parties are graduates of the University of North Dakota.

The Masquerade.

They say girls' college life is dull,
Our days here have no joys;
We don't throw care and work aside,
And "have fun" like the boys.
They little know whereof they speak,
Within our fertile minds
We're forming schemes and plans galore,
Vent for our joys to find.

One night our books were thrown aside,
And, brimming o'er with fun,
We thought we'd try to masquerade,
And forget our tasks undone.
From eight o'clock we spent the time
In seeing out supplies
Of burnt cork, colored pencils, chalk,
And all means of disguise.

At nine the bell rang for recess,
And from each open door
Poured out a stream of merry girls,
Who marched up to third floor.
What magic hand had changed the scene
That erst was not so strange?
What had in our sky parlor dear,
Wrought such a wondrous change?

Instead of groups of laughing girls
Was seen a varied throng
Of nuns and priests, of fairies bright
With dainty jest and song.
The stately Arab, too was there;
The Turk, with haughty stride;
And dudes, whose melting looks were cast
On fair belles at their side.

Two manly cowboys graced the scene
With chivalry most true;
An Indian chief and squaw were there,
In war paint red and blue.
With awful whoops and cruel hate
They chased a shrieking maid;
But to their nature true and tried
The cowboys rushed to aid.

A pretty little sailor lad
Played havoc with some hearts;
A smiling negro, brisk and gay,
Who played with cupid's darts.
Some stately grandames looked about
In wonder at the scene;
And in one corner of the room
A group stood round their queen.

When the waltz's tripping notes began,
Quick formed the strange matched pairs,
Black Africa whirled Mohammedan;
Grave priests forgot their cares.
Nun waltzed with dude, queen bowed to
A strange, fantastic scene, [slave;
Where race and face, creed, name and place
Were lost in mirth most keen.

The time sped rapidly away,
 And soon the bell rang loud;
 Then down the stairway, two by two,
 Hurried the noisy crowd.
 And princes, dudes and fairies all
 And the chief from Singapore
 Bowed low before the one in power
 And begged "ten minutes more."

Letter From Cuba.

HAVANA, CUBA, }
 HOTEL L'INGLETERRE. }
 December 26, 1898. }

I will begin with our embarkation. We went aboard the Whitney Saturday night about 8 o'clock and were to sail from Port Tampa at nine but did not get started until nearly eleven. The boat is very small and old, very poor meals and no lights in the state rooms. It was very rainy yesterday so every one sat around on the lower deck and drowsed. We got off at Key West a few minutes where C. cabled for rooms for Gen. Chaffee and ourselves. We stayed at Key West until half past three. It was very rough all the next morning crossing the gulf stream, so we all stayed in bed until half past eleven when we looked out and saw Morro Castle. We dressed hurriedly and got out on deck to get our first view of Havana. We anchored right near the wreck of the Maine, which resembles nothing so much as a pile of old iron. We had to come ashore in small boats because the steamship company is too stingy to pay the wharf license. There are several vessels in the harbor which are floating the Spanish flag. We met several Cuban families who have been in the United States during the war and I hope to know them better while I am here. It will be nice to know some one who knows the language which we are studying hard ourselves.

The streets are so very, very narrow, scarcely wide enough for teams to pass, but the hotel is just opposite a beautiful plaza.

The hotel is magnificent, marble floors and very high ceilings all frescoed. The beds are all canopied with lace curtains, but the dining room is right in the office on the first floor. Breakfast from 9 to 12 and dinner from 5 to 8; that's all, but they have splendid bread with crust all around it. We are all feeling well and hope to find some place to live and feel a little more at home before long.

January 11, 1899.

* * * Well, at last we are settled in two rooms all our own out at El Vedada, a suburb of Havana. It is about a block from the shore, so we are certainly in a good place so far as fresh air is concerned. * * I wish you could taste the pineapples we eat every day. They just melt in one's mouth. If you will send us some real fresh eggs we will send you some pineapple (pina). A—sent us a very cordial invitation to visit her in Mexico City when we go home. if we are ordered west from here it would be almost as near to go over to Vera Cruz and across from there. * * *
 Remember us to all our friends.

January 19.

* * * * Gen. Chaffee is Gen. Brooke's chief of staff. C— has a great deal of office work to do which is "mucho malo," I think. * * * Gen. Ernst and his aid Mr. L. have just gone. They are making formal calls, I guess, as they only staid about five minutes. There are more generals here than mosquitoes, almost.

I have a beautiful bunch of pink roses to-day. I heard a peculiar little hiss that the Cubans use to attract attention, and looking thro' my iron bars (there is no glass in the windows) I saw the gardener's wife with these roses for me. I certainly enjoy the flowers here if I don't enjoy the garlic. Tonight we tried to make our waiter (who prides himself on his English) understand that we did not like garlic. He understood us to say colic and told us, "colic is a sick of ze stomach for ze man, ze lady and ze child altogether and he no like." He stood there patting his stomach and saying "No like ze sick of ze stomach," etc. until I nearly laughed myself into hysterics.

* * * * *

Be sure and remember us to all our friends at the U. I am sure you will enjoy the reception to the Federation. I enclose some pictures taken January 1 at the palace but the heat blisters the films so they are not much good.

* * * It is almost too cool today to wear a cotton shirt waist. * * *

When anyone asks you how we like Cuba tell them that there are many nice and beautiful things to see but we would not be at all sorry to go back to "The States" tomorrow if it were so ordered.

Liquid Air.

The subject of the liquefaction of air is not a new one. It has long been known that air, like any other gas, was theoretically capable of liquefaction and it is several years since the first liquid air was obtained, yet it is only recently that it has been produced in sufficient quantity for extensive experimental work. Formerly the process was too costly to have any commercial value; now, however, new and more simple methods and apparatus have so reduced the cost that liquid air can be produced in practically unlimited amount.

This fact has awakened a new interest in the subject and, as a result, our knowledge of the properties and applications of this product has been greatly extended. Thus far, however, its practical study has been confined to scientists and comparatively few people have any idea of the wonderful possibilities which liquid air seems to promise.

The method of liquefaction now used is based on the fact that gases, in expanding suddenly after condensation, absorb heat from the surrounding medium which thus becomes intensely cold. The machinery consists of three compressors a purifier and a liquefier. The liquefier is composed of two tubes, one within the other, having a peculiar valve which allows a portion of the compressed air to expand into the outer tube while the remainder passes through the inner. The air of the outer tube in expanding absorbs a vast amount of heat from the air of the inner tube thus bringing the latter to the temperature of liquefaction. One hundred cubic feet of air are by this means converted into a gallon of liquid.

The substance thus produced is of a clear delicate blue color. It is the coldest free liquid known. Its critical temperature—the temperature above which it cannot remain liquid—is 140°C; its boiling point is 191°C; its freezing point 207°C. The extreme cold which these figures represent may be illustrated by many curious and startling experiments. The following are given by Prof. W. C. Peckham, of Adelphi College.

Pieces of tin, iron and rubber, on being immersed for some time in liquid air, became so brittle that they flew to pieces on being struck.

A quantity of mercury was poured into a dish and the dish placed in a basin of liquid air. The mercury immediately became solid and was used to drive a nail.

A very remarkable experiment was performed with a glass tube in which liquid air was boiled in a vacuum. The sides of the tube became covered with ice crystals through which trickled drops of liquid air condensed directly from the atmosphere of the room.

The most striking experiment given is this: A quantity of liquid air was poured into a tea-kettle and the kettle placed over a hot fire. The liquid boiled violently but a glass of water poured into the kettle was immediately frozen. On removing the kettle from the fire its under surface was found to be covered with solid carbon dioxide the freezing point of which is  $207^{\circ}\text{C}$ .

As yet very few practical uses and applications of liquid air have been made, but as the question is one of the highest scientific interest, investigators are becoming more and more numerous. The appliances and skill required in the manipulation of liquid air will perhaps forbid its common use for some time, but the ingenuity of man will doubtless soon devise some safe and practical method of utilizing this powerful agent.

Normal Items

It is told of Oliver Wendell Holmes that when a young practicing physician he contemplated putting out the sign: "Small fevers gratefully received." We feel like putting out the same sign in the Normal column, only changing fevers to favors. We would thankfully receive any small item in the way of news for this column; anything of interest pertaining to the Normal Department.

The Junior Normals will each read three of Dr. Rice's criticisms this year and report on the same. They will also visit three schools, or three different rooms in graded schools and report observations made.

There are 117 students enrolled in the Normal Department this year.

Miss Ina Sanford left the morning of February 20 to take charge of the primary department in the Inkster schools.

Prof. Squires is critic teacher in Geography, Mr. McNeal in U. S. History, and Prof. Kennedy in Grammar and Arithmetic.

Thirteen Senior Normals are candidates for diplomas this year—the largest Normal class that has ever graduated here. It is, too, an exceptionally strong one. The course is two years in advance of that in the other Normal Schools. Our graduates will be competent to do excellent work in upper grades and high schools.

Realizing the value of observing good methods in teaching, the Senior Normals have decided to visit the city schools each Monday during the spring term. Our class will spare no pains to fit themselves for their vocation—the noble work of guiding the intellectual, moral and physical development of human beings.

The first corps of teachers from the Senior Normal class have served their turn in practice teaching. They fully realize the value of such training under the helpful criticism of the foremost educators of the state. This work gives the practice teacher confidence and self-possession as well as new ideas in the way of presenting her subject.

There was presented to the public once before in the history of the University, a woman's edition of THE STUDENT. Now once again is presented a similar edition.

We have closed the door on the last retreating masculine form; we have swarmed into the editor's sanctum sanctorum; we have climbed into his spacious chair; we have seized his best pen, and are ready for our new duties. Should ideas not come upon the electric contact of pen and paper bear patiently with us. Is it not a sign of the times, one of the marks of this fin de siecle age—the fact that whole editorial staffs sometimes vacate and gallantly ask us to come in and reign for a time? We appreciate the courtesy and in return will try to prove ourselves not entirely unworthy of the position.

Are we going to let our society work hesitate, languish, die during the spring term? Are the ball-ground, the bicycle, the tennis court, the railroad track going to make the usual ravages in our ranks? Are Per Gradus and Adelpi already preparing for that long sleep that has hitherto fallen upon them? This is a state of affairs that should not exist. The state University should certainly be able to support its literary societies the year around and not allow them to fall a prey to "spring languor" in this negligent fashion. Why not let us make this year one marked by the continuance of the societies through the three terms?

Already we begin to look forward to the spring term. There are some things for which we are hoping. One is the second meeting of the Mulberry Club; another, the organization of a Shakespearian club, and the presentation of a Shakespearian play. There is no reason why we should not have a flourishing Shakespearian club. Since there are so many who enjoy the plays of Shakespeare and wish to study them more thoroughly, a club of this kind should certainly be a success.

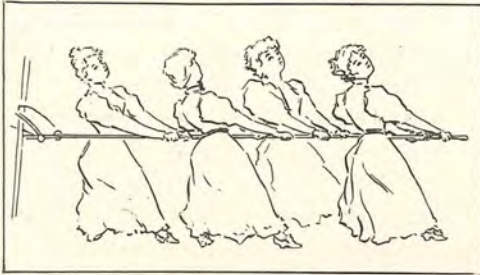

The spring term seems peculiarly adapted for such work, the studies being less difficult, the hours not so long, and everything in general more favorable for pursuits like these. Let us agitate the subject.

Athletics.

It has been said that "the girls" take no exercise. It is the purpose of this column to prove the falsehood of this statement. On winter days when the northern blasts sweep over

Dakota's prairies, and one dares not venture forth alone, the girls, summoned by their commander, march forth, two by two, with a heavy rope carried firmly between them.

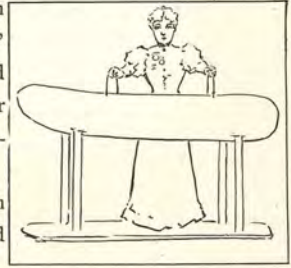

When warmer winds hold sway, the girls one by one, climb down the fire escape, thus preparing themselves for the time of need.

Again, when even the bravest dare not venture out for the daily walk, the girls and chaperon seek the boys' gymnasium and spend an hour in vigorous exercise.

They swing on the trapeze and jump the horse.

Personal

Miss Emma Weiss spent February 6th with her mother in Grand Forks.

Miss Maude Daly spent February 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd at her home in Minto.

Mrs. Cooper of Emerado, spent the evening or February 13th with her daughter, Miss Maude.

L. Blecker, after an absence of nearly a month returned to the University for a few days before accepting a position in a Wahpeton bank.

W. L. Nuessle, a member of the class of '99, went to Fargo on February 20th, as the University representative at the meeting of the North Dakota Inter-Collegiate Athletic Association.

On February 9th Miss Minnie Hobbins of Neche, North Dakota, entered the University. Her former home was in London, Ontario, where she received the best musical advantages.

All University students will be glad to hear of Fred E. Smith, who graduated in the class of '94. Mr. Smith joined the North Dakota volunteers at the opening with the war with Spain and is now encamped by the Pasig river, near Manila. At first he was sergeant major, but lately he has been advanced to second lieutenant.

C. B. Riesland passed through Grand Forks February 13th on his way to Spokane, Washington.

Mr. Junkins expects soon to accept the principalship of the public schools of Voss, North Dakota.

H. M. Francis spent the week beginning Feb. 18th and ending on the 25th, at his home near Hillsboro.

C. L. Fairchild and F. D. L. Squires spent Sunday, Feb. 19th with A. L. McDonald in Grand Forks.

Mr. Anderson, a member of the third preparatory class, went to his home near Grafton on February 13th.

A. S. Burrows of Grand Forks, spent February 20th with Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Cravath at the University.

Miss Mary Collins left the University for her home in Pembina county on February 9th. She expects to teach school soon.

Miss Clara Olsen, Miss Mabel Francis, Miss Maude Daly, Messrs. Francis, G. A. McDonald, Calder, Daly, Barrett, Trainor and Nelson, all spent Feb. 22 at home.

Miss Josephine Olson, who was ill during nearly all of January, returned to the University on February 6th, but finding that her health would not allow her to remain, went to her home in Buxton on February 9th.

The telephone line which runs from the main building to C. B. Smith's home in Grand Forks has been extended so that it now goes across the track to the bachelor hall of Messrs. Flanagan, Skulason, Robinson and Olgerson.

Society Notes.

During the reception of January 28th about a dozen students took advantage of the ice rink and spent a short time skating.

On February 13th some fifty University students attended the reception given at the Hotel Dacotah by the Episcopal church to Bishop Edsall.

On February 3rd Miss Reynolds gave one of her pleasant five o'clock teas to the preparatory boys who room on the first floor of their building. Stories were told and amusing first recollections given.

On the afternoon of January 28th in Miss Reynolds parlor the heads of tables met Mrs. M. A. Brannon. An informal two hours were greatly enjoyed by the twenty-three people who nearly filled Miss Reynolds' parlor.

On February 10th the preparatory boys of the second floor were the fortunate ones who spent an hour in Miss Reynolds' parlor. They learned how to make tea and, incidentally, how to make it last long after it is gone. These occasions are enjoyed all the more because they show the interest our instructors take in us.

The preparatory boys gave a reception February 11th, in the parlor of the ladies' dormitory. A short but very entertaining program was rendered, consisting of songs, a recitation, a mock battle between the United States and the Phillipines, and a tableau representing a boy's troubles with an invisible moustache. Two original songs were given, one of which, at least, had a strong local tinge. The latter part of the evening was given up to a progressive game of authors. All present voted the preparatory boys excellent entertainers.

On February 6th the French club held its first meeting with Prof. Macnie. The club has eight enthusiastic members who meet twice each week to converse for an hour in French.

On February 14th the Freshmen organized a class. The officers are as follows: President—Frank Vobayda; vice president, Miss Edna Twamley; secretary and treasurer, Miss Clara Wallace.

A masquerade ball occurred on the evening of January 20th on the third floor of the ladies' dormitory. Although the invitations were given but two hours before the grand march began, American ingenuity did not desert the participants. Wonderfully were the costumes made. All nations and classes were present; the French belle, the English dude, the American Indian, and the tramp, the Turk, the Spaniard, the German and Norwegian, all were present.

On February 20th Miss Reynolds gave another of her delightful afternoon teas. Eight young men who can claim Iceland for their mother country, were present with young lady friends. Each young lady was privileged to ask each young gentleman some question about Iceland, and many were the interesting pieces of information given. Among others, that the chief source of fuel is ice. Even the chafing dish seemed imbued with the merry spirit, for it did its part toward entertainingly enveloping itself and causing a decided but short lived excitement. But its little overflow of spirits being soon quenched, the guests went home voting the afternoon most delightful.

On the evening of February 4th the University students enjoyed a rare musical treat in the program arranged and carried out by Miss Calvart. Prof. Rollefson expected to furnish several numbers, but was prevented by illness. But Miss Calvart was equal to the emergency and gave several extra numbers on account of Prof. Rollefson's enforced absence. Miss Nellie Johnson gave a recitation and the comb band and the girls' chorus gave two selections. The following program was rendered:

1. Duet :
  - a. Chopin Polanaise . . . . .
  - b. Peer Pynt . . . . . Grieg
Miss Calvart and Miss Koller.
2. Piano Solo :
  - a. Beethoven Sonata . . . . .
  - b. Schubert Impromptu—a flat. . . . .
  - c. Gavotte . . . . . Dreyschock
Miss Calvart.
3. Piano Solo :
  - a. Gavotte Mignon . . . . . Thomas
  - b. Serenade Waltzes . . . . . Schubert
  - c. Shepherds All and Maidens Fair . . . . . Nevin
Miss Calvart.

On the evening of February 22nd the Sophomore class gave a banquet to the Freshmen. After several pleasant hours the entertainers and guests were served with delicious refreshments. The room and table were daintily decorated in the colors of the Sophomore and the Freshman classes, purple, olive green, white and white and gold respectively. Mr. Frazier was toast master. President Merrifield spoke on the twentieth century. Miss Edith Johnson, president of the Sophomore class, gave a toast on "The Naughty Twos." Mr. Vobayda, president of the Freshman class, responded with "The Naughty Ones." Mr. Skulason gave an original poem entitled "A Glimpse of the Future." Mr. Donald McDonald spoke on "The Freshman Class Twenty-Five Years Hence." Mr. A. L. McDonald on "When we were Freshmen." Mr. F. D. L. Squires spoke on "George Washington," and Miss Edna Twamley on "Our Responsibilities to our Superiors." The evening was an entire success and fulfilled the highest hopes of both classes.

After our hopes have perished,
After our trust is dead,
After the gleams of the dawning,
Have, like the roses fled,
After the soul's ambition
Has gone with the heart's desire,
After our faith is ashes
The janitor builds the fire.

After our pipes are frozen,
After the pitchers crack,
After the potted violets
Are dead 'neath the frost's attack;
After the chills of winter,
Before Spring's warmth retires,
After its hot at Medicine Hat
The janitor builds the fires.

He builds it and builds it and builds it,
He burns anthracite by the ton;
After we're parboiled and roasted
We find he has just begun.
After we're dead and well buried,
'Mid the flames mounting higher and higher,
We'll suffer less for we'll understand
It's the janitor building the fire.

Poetry.

Ring out ye little tinkling bell;
The week's eventful night must end.
Your tones resound like a dismal knell,
And once more sever friend from friend.
Ring out, wild bell, through the startled air,
Till every boy is gone—and chair.
Ring out, ye little tinkling bell.

B. M. D.

Her brow is furrowed, pale her cheek,
Her eye is stern and wild;
I know not what her sorrow is,
She once was calm and mild.
She has no time to walk or skate,
Her hours of rest are brief,
Oh, why so changed and sad of late,
Dear editor-in-chief?

M. C. C.

Victoria was born on the 24th of May,
Yes, but three days before is John's birthday.

The mossy carpet soft and green
Lies spread upon the smiling earth,
And life on every hill is seen,

Then love-lorn lads and lassies blest
Meander up and down the track,
Till skies all golden in the west
Remind them they must journey back,

Of chaperons, some grave, some gay,
We've had both great and small,
But for our sleighing parties here
Chicago's best of all.

M. C. C.

Anyone can bear his burden, howe'er heavy
till the nightfall,
Anyone can do his duty one day more 'mid toil and strife;
Anyone can live discreetly, purely, patiently and sweetly
'Till the sun has gone to rest
In the crimson tinted west.
And this is all there really is in life. F. M.

She's very, very sad at times,
And why I cannot tell;
But all this sadness vanishes
At mention of Cornell. M. C. C.

Side Talks With Boys

[Under this heading I will cheerfully answer any question I can, sent me by my boy readers. Those desirous of an immediate reply must enclose either a self-addressed stamped envelope or stamps. AUNT SALLIE.]

Town Boys.—You say it is very hard, but really couldn't you be more careful when eating your lunches in the recitation rooms about dropping orange peelings, egg shells, etc. on the floor? It would be a great kindness to teachers as well as scholars.

Frisky Freshman.—No, indeed; it is not at all proper to ask a young lady to go some place about five minutes before the time to go.

Prep. Boy.—In reply to your query, I would say, my dear boy, that you certainly did very wrong in not sending your regrets to the young lady who gave the tea party, when you found you could not attend.

Most Pi(e)ous Pietate.—I was very much surprised at your query as to the propriety of eating pie in the parlor, That is an offense in etiquette of which children alone are supposed to be guilty.

Cupid.—You ask what is the proper age for a young man to marry. According to the teacher in Political Economy, the chances of a man between the ages of twenty and twenty-five of getting married are ten times better than those of a man between the ages of thirty and thirty-five.

Inquiring Junior.—Your question as to whether "Jolly Miller" and "Pig in the Parlor" will ever cease to be played is very timely. They certainly have gone out of fashion in the greater part of the civilized world. They are two of the relics of barbarism handed down from pre-historic ages to which some few people cling with surprising tenacity.

Unsophisticated Soph.—Concerning your question as to the number of young ladies one could with propriety ask after being refused, I would say the limit should not exceed eight or ten.

Sweet William.—From the specimen of your handwriting sent, I would say you are even-tempered, wise, of a smiling disposition and are very apt to have heart trouble. You have, I should judge, much ingenuity, especially in thinking out schemes for making the receptions and meal times more pleasant, and an excellent eye for business propositions.

The Legislators.

On February 8th the "U" was visited by the five senators chosen to inspect the public institutions of the state, in view of giving them an appropriation. The first part of the day was spent in visiting the different buildings. After dinner the student body assembled in Chapel Hall. Short and interesting speeches were made by Senators Allen, Ames and McCanna. All spoke very highly of the institution. The committee on appropriations has recommended that $7,500 be given to the state University in addition to a tax of two-fifths of a mill on all taxable property in the state.

The Work of the Societies.

A new impetus was given to the work and interest in the University Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. when Mr. Burton St. John, one of the travelling secretaries of the Student Volunteer Movement, visited us on February 15th, 16th and 17th. Mr. St. John is a '98 graduate of the Northwestern University and is at present making a tour of Western colleges in the interest of his special work and Y. M. C. A. work in general. On the evening of the 15th he addressed the young men and the following evening held a joint meeting of the young ladies and young men in the parlor. He very ably set before the students the purpose, history and work of the Student Volunteer movement. At a meeting of the young men held on the 17th thirty or more of the students expressed a desire to become members of the local Y. M. C. A. The work to be taken up will consist of weekly prayer meetings, such as have been held formerly, and also a course in Bible study.

Before this issue of THE STUDENT appears the open meeting of Adelphi will doubtless be a thing of the past. The program planned for that occasion is as follows:

Opening Address . . . . .	Mr. Bickford
Oration . . . . .	Mr. Rounsevell
Music . . . . .	Prof. Rollefson
Poem . . . . .	Miss Ferguson
Music . . . . .	Trio
Farce . . . . .	"The Great Catastrophe"

Per Gradus is more flourishing than ever this term. All college students have withdrawn from the society and left it as it was intended to be, a society of preparatory students. An open meeting will be held some time in the near future.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE

In Affiliation with the University of Chicago.

The curriculum of the school of medicine requires a proper preliminary education, and three years of study in college, devoted to laboratory, didactic and clinical instruction, to recitations and to manual training in the use of instruments and appliances.

Instruction is given in two capacious, well lighted edifices. The new building contains five large laboratories, in which are conducted the practical laboratory courses in Anatomy, Physiology and Histology, Chemistry, Materia Medica, Pathology and Bacteriology.

The old building is devoted to instruction by clinics, didactic lectures, and by numerous important practical courses in manual training in manipulations, and in the use of instruments employed in medical science, surgery, obstetrics and the specialties.

Manual Training in all departments is a special feature of the instruction in this college. Systematic recitations, conducted in five commodious recitation rooms, are regarded as a most important means of teaching. With over 70 professors and instructors, and with ample room and appliances, this school is able to furnish its classes with the most approved systematic education in medicine. Physicians and medical students are invited to visit the laboratories and to inspect the educational appliances of this school. For further information and for announcements apply to the College Clerk or to the Secretary.
