Lambda Chi alum admits to skeletons

By YVETTE WELLS Herald Staff Writer

The University of North Dakota chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity celebrated its 50th anniversary Homecoming weekend, and the chapter members refused to do it without 74-yearold Victor Rose, the first Lambda Chi president.

The bearded, Donnybrook, N.D., native traveled from Vista, Calif. accompanied by his daughter, Nancy Rose Buschnell.

Rose was a little modest about his college days at first, but with a little prompting from an attentive audience, he obligingly revealed a little of his life in 1929.

The 1929 graduate majored in journalism and minored in business. "I went into banking, though. They paid me three times as much."

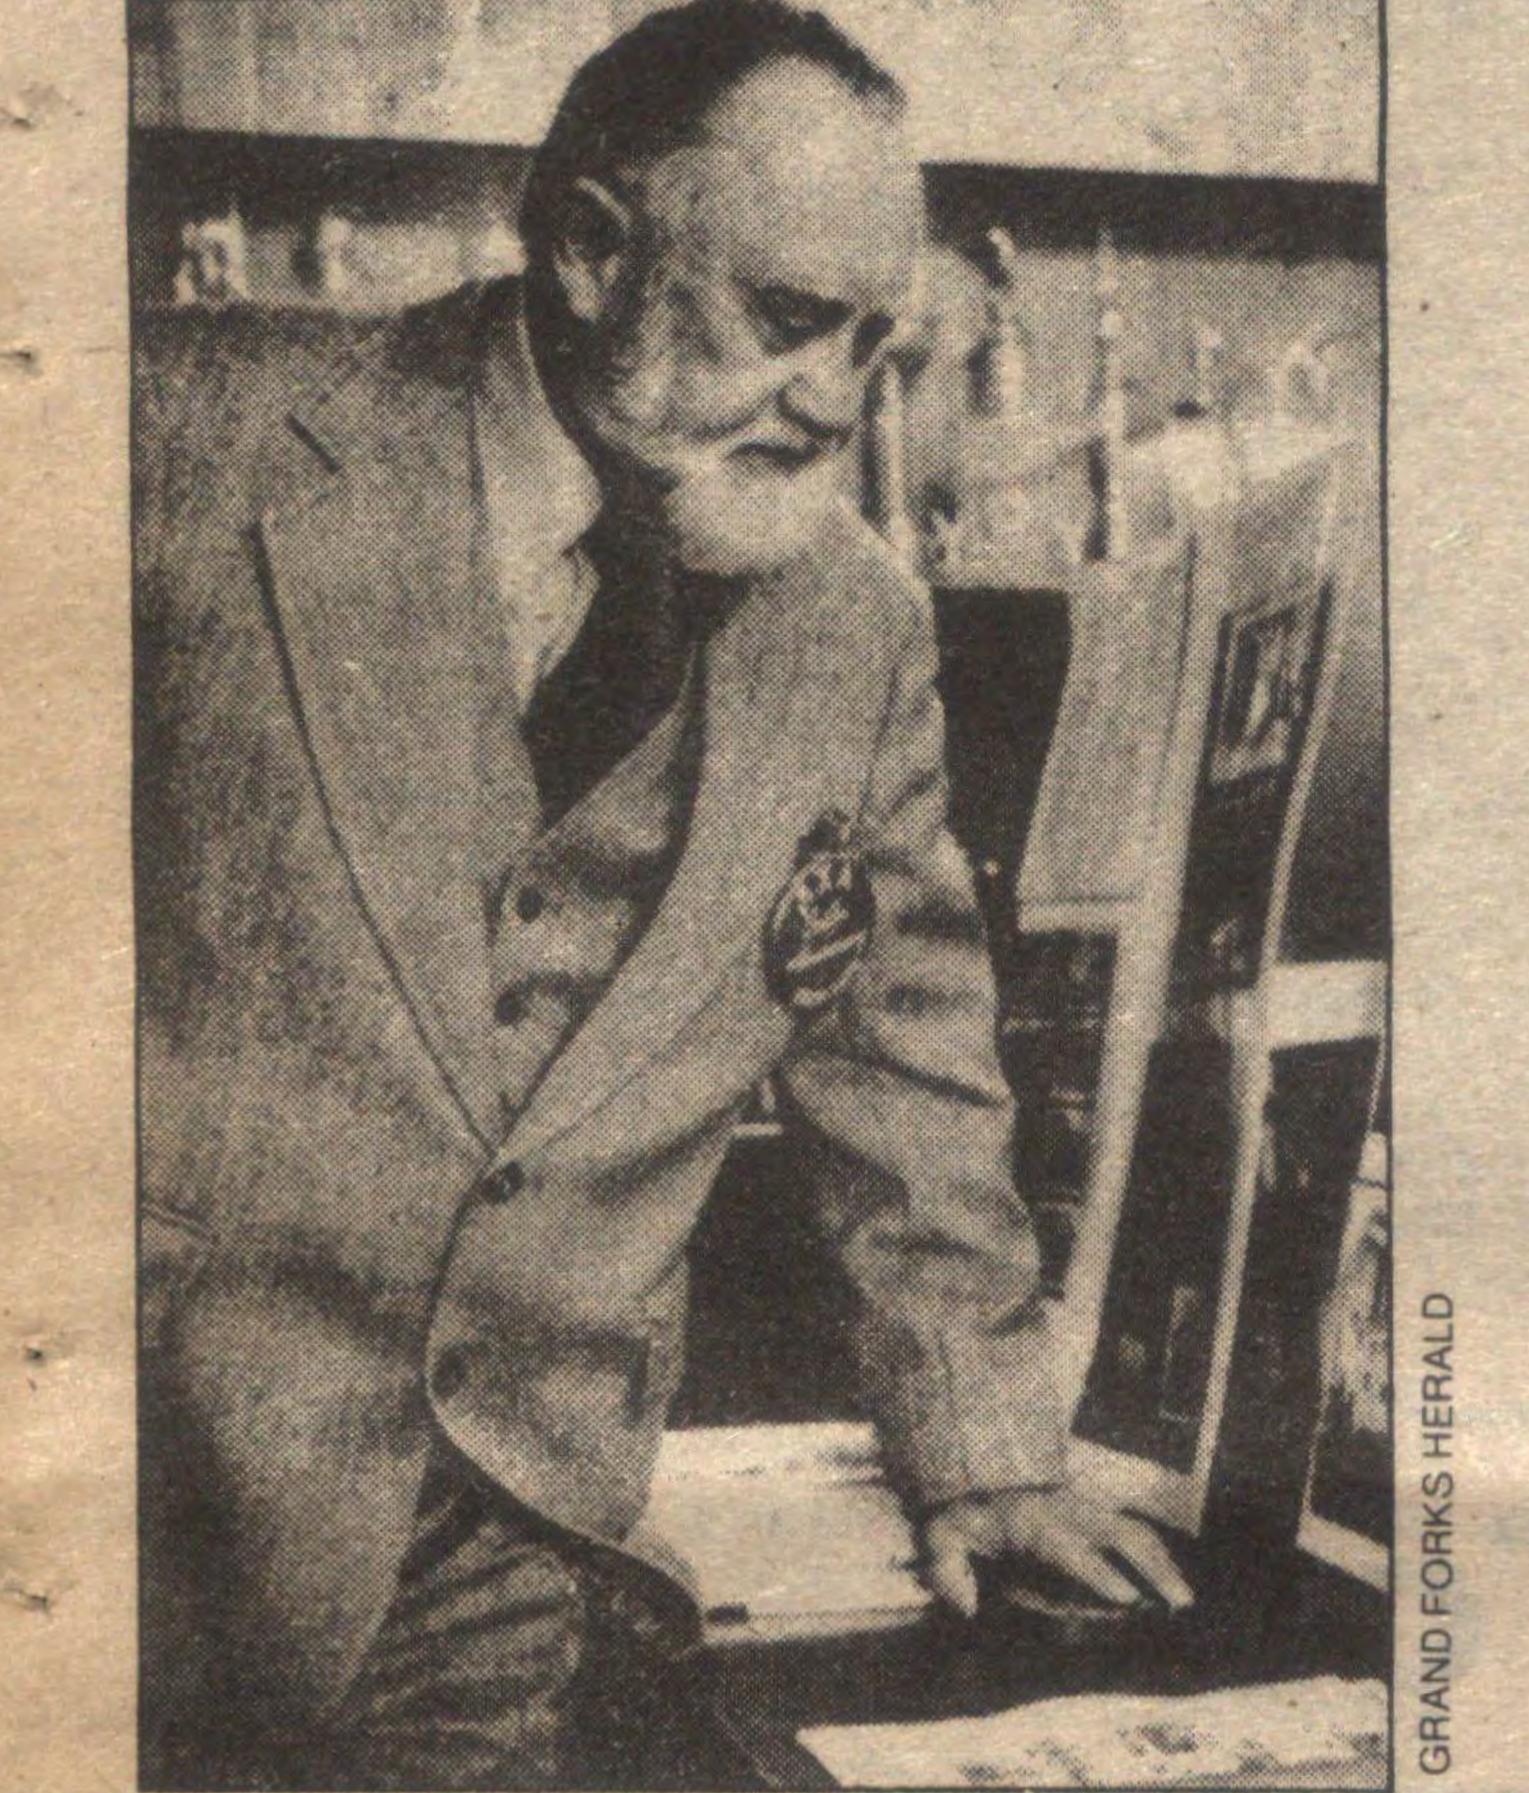

Rose's successful career took him to South America and various parts of the country. He says Lambda Chi prepared him for the world.

Rose reluctantly admitted, however, to a few skeletons in his closet from his fraternity days.

"They'll never forgive me," he said shaking his head as he began a story.

It seems that Rose stumbled to his room in Budge Hall late one night after a dance at the Oaks in East Grand Forks. "I was pretty well organized," he confessed. "We were getting a little loud."

At about 2 a.m. he was called down by the hall officials and told to be moved out of the dorm by 8 a.m.

"I got up at five minutes to eight and went to class. I figured they'd never find me there."

But in his heart he knew he would probably be kicked out of school. That is, until fate intervened.

While in class, three members of Lambda Chi — which was then just a national organization — heard of the incident and approached him that day.

"They heard I was being kicked out of Budge and offered me a place to stay." (continued on page 7)

UND budget request for 1979-81 being analyzed by Governor

Final word on the Gov. Arthur Link 1979-1981 budget recommendation for the University of North Dakota was not yet available at Alumni Review press time, but it appeared likely that some cuts would be made in the UND request already approved by the State Board of Higher Education.

Complicating the state's fiscal situation was the approval in the November election of two initiated measures. One cuts state income tax rates, and the other diverts five percent of future state tax revenue to local units of government.

The result, observers say, is a general atmosphere of austerity both in the governor's office and among state legislators. The governor's budget recommendations for all state agencies, including the colleges and universities, will serve as the draft appropriations bill to be considered by the Legislative Assembly which convenes on January 3.

The University's budget request for the two-year period beginning July 1, 1979, already has been reviewed, and reduced, by the State Board of Higher Education.

The Board-approved budget now being considered by the governor is divided into three sections. The general UND budget for the biennium is $53.9 million, the Medical Center (medicine and nursing) budget is $18.1 million, and the self-supporting Rehabilitation Hospital budget is $14.3 million. In addition, the Board has authorized UND to seek $5 million in plant improvements, and $4.5 million apiece for additions to the Chester Fritz Library and the physical education building. areas, but point out that they must balance a variety of state needs with limited resources.

Expected to receive considerable discussion during the Legislative session will be the continued progress in the UND School of Medicine.

The school is a statewide, decentralized, community-based program which emphasizes primary care. President Thomas Clifford and other UND officials have pointed out that the school is in the final stages of a phased conversion from a two-year basic science curriculum to a comprehensive medical education program which offers the M.D. degree and advanced residency training.

The conversion process, which began in 1973, makes necessary the inclusion of requests in the budget proposal which represent spending above what would be required to maintain the present operation. This spending to replace previous federal start-up funding and to support augmented programs is expected to be completed in the 1981-1983 process, Clifford said. The original cost projections for the conversion, when adjusted for inflation, have not been exceeded, he adds.

The heart of the request is the proposed general University budget, which, as approved by the Board but likely to be reduced by the governor, represents a $13 million increase over the 1977-1979 biennium. The largest portion, $41.7 million of the $53.9 million is in the area of salaries and wages.

As might be expected, consideration of the general university budget will center largely around the issue of faculty positions and faculty compensation.

The Board-approved proposal for UND would yield 28 new faculty positions to strengthen understaffed programs and to cover faculty personnel costs which have never been adequately reflected in the state appropriation. The Board also has approved an expansion of the salary base by 12.1 percent the first year and 8 percent the second year of the biennium to adjust for inflation, to move compensation levels more in line with regional standards, and to provide pay increases for meritorious personnel.

Both the governor's office and legislators have said they understand the strong rationale for increases in these If approved, the money for the University's state appropriated spending will come both from institutional collections mostly tuition — and from the state general fund. Students are expected to pay higher tuition beginning in the fall of 1979 as their share of the increased cost of education.

UND officials point out that state appropriations typically pay for about 35 percent of the total cost of operating the University for a biennium. The largest part of the non-state revenue is generated by such UND auxiliary enterprises as the residence halls and food service. But a significant part of the University's instructional and research program also is supported by grants, contracts, gifts and other non-state monies.

Alumni Review will include brief progress reports in future issues as the UND budget moves through channels.

Gift annuity example explained

Here is an example of a true to life situation of how a gift annuity arrangement worked for the benefit of one of our graduates and his wife, and the University of North Dakota:

Many years ago this couple purchased a residential property as an investment. This property was purchased for $17,000 and was located in a smaller community. The rental return in the most recent year was $250 a month. Out of this, the owners paid taxes, major maintenance, and a managerial fee to a local realtor.

After reading about gift annuities, the couple decided this kind of an arrangement would work very well for them. The property, valued at $63,500, was donated to the University of North Dakota Foundation.

The Foundation sold the property to the present tenants. The donors will now receive a lifetime annuity of $3,800 a year. Of this, $1,731 will be reported as ordinary income and $1,892 will be reported as long term capital gains. The donors will be able to take a $22,160 deduction on their income tax as a contribution to a qualifying educational organization. This deduction can be carried over for five years from the year of the contribution.

The advantages are obvious. The couple will receive an increased income over their two lifetimes. They will have the advantage of a major part of this income being reported for tax purposes as long term capital gains and a small amount not being taxed at all. And then, most importantly, they have the satisfaction of knowing that they are providing for a special project sometime in the future at the University of North Dakota in their name.

This type of gift annuity arrangement is an ideal way to provide lifetime income for a person, a couple, or a surviving spouse. The amount of the annuity and the size of the allowable gift deduction will change somewhat, of course, depending on the ages of the annuity recipients.

ALUMNI REVIEW

Smiley summarizes women's athletic programs

Q. Helen, it's been about a year and a half since you last reported on women's athletics to our alumni. Have there been any significant changes in the women's athletic programs in that time?

A. The most significant aspect of the women's athletic program over the past year or so has been its steady growth and the improvement in quality of performance of the women athletes. More and more talented young women are seeking positions on college teams, having had positive athletic opportunities during their high school years. As the coordinator of women's athletics, it is not only challenging but a truly exciting experience to work with young college-age women as they venture into endeavors of personal challenge and commitment.

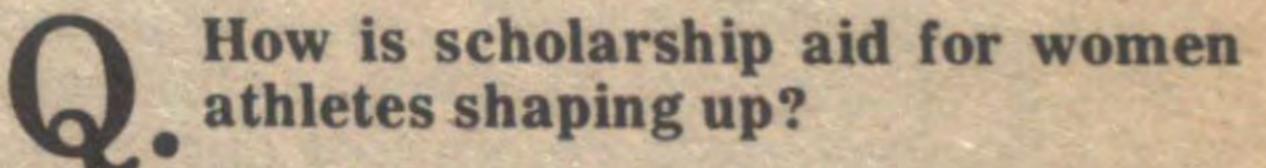

Q. Some new coaches have been added. Can you give us a rundown on the women's coaches?

A. The athletic facilities at UND are scheduled very tightly, with classes, men's and women's athletics and recreational activities. In all honesty, I would say that the facilities are not totally adequate to house a 24-sport athletic program at the level at which we currently operate. Being the largest institution in the state, it is our obligation to host tournaments at both the high school and college levels. Our facility is lacking dressing room areas for the women and hospitality areas needed for hosting such events.

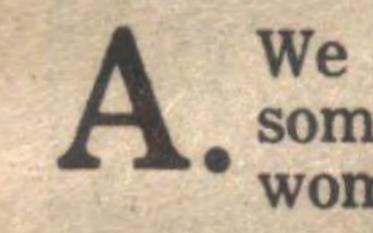

The athletic department is making every effort to make necessary changes and improvements in the facilities so as to best meet the needs of all programs and all students.

Q. In your seven years here what have been the changes in the professional preparation program in physical education and intramural participation of women? How are the job opportunites for women HPER majors? More and more young women are coming to the University with a good sports background and are attempting to continue competition and participation through University programs.

A. The University of North Dakota is currently offering the maximum amount of scholarship aid allowed under the New Divisional alignment (Division II) in the AIAW. Tuition and fees scholarships are awarded in the areas of field hockey, basketball, volleyball and track. We have many worthy applicants seeking such aid and are pleased to be able to offer some aid toward the financing of their college education.

Q. The women's basketball team is gearing up for its season now. How do things look for the coming year?

We are very fortunate to have some excellent coaches in the women's athletic program at UND.

Our newest coach is Carol Thompson, the volleyball coach. She has just completed her first season at UND, having taught and coached at Mayville (N.D.) State for the last two years. Prior to her years at Mayville, Carol taught physical education and coached various sports at the high school level in the state of Pennsylvania.

Margaret Peterson is in her second year of coaching field hockey at UND. Margaret is a native of Grand Forks, and was an outstanding Sioux athlete during heryears at UND.

Dee Watson, women's basketball coach, is looking forward to the approaching basketball season with great anticipation. Dee has coached and taught for many years and has assisted with basketball clinics and summer camps for several years. Her assistant for the second year is Shirlan Mosley. Shirlan has been an active competitor in softball and basketball as well as a coach and instructor of physical education while in Grand Forks.

Peg Seeling, another new staff member this year, is coaching the women's track and field team and women's cross country. Peg is from Minnesota, having done work at Bemidji State University and the University of Minnesota as well as having coached several sports at Eveleth high school for three years.

Helen Smiley

Minn-Kota conference along with Bemidji State University. The UND team took top honors in the Minn-Kota tennis tournament. Congratulations to all for a most successful fall season.

Q. Are there any trends you're noticing in regards to women's athletics at UND?

> A. The greatest trend in the area of women's athletics is that of everexpanding opportunities for competition. The avenues for competition are broadening in scope; opportunities for travel and for communication with athletes from various regions of the country are being provided for many young women today. Women's athletics at the national level is experiencing realignment into new competitive divisions based on financial aid allocation and total program offerings.

What is the status of the Minn-Kota conference?

A The status of the Minn-Kota conference is rather uncertain at this time due to the fact that the state institutions in Minnesota and the smaller colleges in North Dakota have formed a conference alignment, leaving UND and NDSU without a definite conference (alignment). We are currently exploring several alternatives for our women's program. We are looking at the possibility of being a part of the North Central Conference—of which our men's program is a part. We are also looking to neighboring states for possible affiliation. A. Since I first joined the University of North Dakota faculty in 1971, many overt changes have come about — on campus and within the HPER department. Probably one of the most evident has been the total coordination of the department — in physical education classes, intramurals and recreation, and athletics. It is exciting to work in such an atmosphere where all are working together to attain goals to meet the needs of men and women alike.

The professional preparation program in the area of physical education has a revised curriculum — one which allows greater flexibility for the student. Intramural participation continues to grow as more and more college students seek active participation in the sports of their choice. Women are finding themselves a part of both of these programs and are diving headlong into them with great desire. The job opportunities for women coaches are especially good; physical education jobs are available, but often with coaching or a second teaching area as a co-requisite. The road is open for the young women as they leave the University of North Dakota campus, especially if they are willing to go to the far corners of the state for a chance to begin their profession.

A. The women's basketball team is definitely gearing up for an exciting season in 1978-79. In looking ahead to the schedule, one will notice some excellent tournaments in addition to the Minn-Kota conference schedule. The team begins the season with a road trip to Thunder Bay, Ontario; the first home game was Nov. 29 with Wahpeton.

> Coach Watson has several returning letterwinners in addition to some promising new athletes. Returning from last year are seniors Kristi Layhon of Pembina, N.D. and Nancy Youlden of Grand Forks; juniors Pam Solseth of Wadena, Minn. and Gail Ingwalson of Buxton, N.D.; and sophomores Nancy Nottestadt of Maddock, N.D. and Jana Calkins of Brighton, Colo. Two scholarship athletes returning to the Sioux line-up are Eileen King of Casselton, N.D. and Wendy Kuske of New England, N.D. Freshmen on UND basketball scholarships are Mary Dalglish of Grand Forks, Laurie Bakke of Buxton, N.D. and Julie Van Nest of Pequot Lakes, Minn.

Q. What does the future hold for women's athletics?

A. I see the future of women's athletics as holding many excellent competitive opportunities for highly skilled individuals. A true dedication and desire to excel will have to be foremost in the hearts of all young women athletes as they strive to improve their performance through a quality program.

Dale Anderson has coached gymnastics at UND for the past 7 years; he is currently coaching both the men's and women's teams at UND. Bill Nash, the men's and women's swim coach, is in his second year at UND. He came to Grand Forks from Winnipeg, Manitoba and has experience coaching Canadian swim club teams prior to coming to UND.

Iain Adams is in his third season of coaching the women's badminton team. Iain is a graduate student in CTL and is involved in many sports activities on campus along with his coaching responsibilities.

Patricia Mauch is the coach of the women's golf team. Pat has been at UND since 1960, actively engaged in teaching, coaching, and administration in the department of HPER.

Patricia Warcup, a native of Grand Forks, is the women's softball coach. This is Pat's second full season in that position, since softball was just reinstated into the program a few years ago. Pat has had many competitive experiences and many years of coaching; at UND, she has been primarily involved in basketball and softball. Q. What about facilities for the women? Are they adequate or are any changes in the offing?

nite 878 Q. As a general trend, are women on campus becoming more physically inclined?

> A. As a general trend, women are taking part in physical activities to a much greater extent than in past years. Not only are they taking up such sports as golf and tennis, but many are spending time jogging, playing racquetball and improving their body systems through healthful exercise.

Women's athletics will no longer be thought of as "fun and games" but will be seriously competitive yet healthily administered. I have every confidence that the University of North Dakota will be among the top schools in its division in terms of total program offerings, quality of coaching, and administrative and university support.

Marcia Melberg, women's tennis coach, is another new coach on our staff. A native of Grand Forks, Marcia sells real estate in town. She is the assistant pro at the Grand Forks Tennis Centre along with her coaching responsibilities.

Q. The fall sports have pretty much come to an end. Are there any specific accomplishments you would like to note? The tennis team has done especially well.

A. All of the fall sports have come to an end, each with a feeling of real accomplishment and improvement. In women's golf, Marcia Gibb, UND's no. 1 golfer was the medalist in all of UND's meets and the M-K tournament. The field hockey team beat South Dakota State to earn a berth in region 6 field hockey champ at St. Louis, Mo. Although cross country and volleyball teams did not go on to regional competition, the teams completed five seasons, experiencing gains in total records and individual times. The UND women's tennis team finished the season as co-champion of the JANUARY 19, 20 & 21, 1979

Linfoot continues work in medical research

By DAVE VORLAND

University of North Dakota alumnus John A. Linfoot had intended to return to the campus during Homecoming 1978 for the 25th anniversary of his graduating class. After all, he had served as chairman of the Homecoming Committee during his junior year at UND, and this fall's reunion of the class of 1953 was being organized by his Sigma Chi fraternity brother Walt Swingen.

Unfortunately, Linfoot had to send his regrets. Today he is a physician, senior scientist, and clinical professor of medicine at the University of California at Berkeley. Among conflicts preventing his trip to Grand Forks were a guest lecture to a postgraduate symposium at Northwestern University, an impending business trip to Italy, and a demand from his publisher that he complete the final two chapters of a new book.

Described in a recent newspaper article as "an endocrinologist with a glorious Gay 90's mustache and a dry wit," Linfoot has achieved an outstanding reputation as a researcher in the University of California's prestigious Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory. He was honored with a Sioux Award in 1970.

Linfoot holds three degrees from the University of North Dakota, a B.A. in premedicine, an M.S. in physiology and pharmacology, and the B.S. degree in medicine which marks the end of the first two years of medical education. As all UND medical students did prior to 1973, he transferred to another school, Harvard University, to finish his M.D. Today he is board certified in three medical specialities, internal medicine, nuclear medicine, and endocrinology — the study of the glands of internal secretion.

Linfoot does get back to the UND campus on occasion, usually to lecture in the medical school. A few years ago, he recalled during an Alumni Review interview in his office on the Berkeley campus, he seriously considered returning to teach fulltime in the rapidly developing UND School of Medicine.

Physician and researcher John Linfoot, '53, '55 and '55 pauses in front of the restricted entrance to a building housing one of the University of California's cyclotrons.

Patients from all over the world come to the University of California for treatment of pituitary tumors and related disorders such as acromegaly, the abnormal enlargement of the facial features, arms and feet resulting from tumor-induced over-production of certain hormones.

The cyclotron is an atom smashing apparatus known as an accelerator. Several the central nervous system, on normal and tumor tissues, and on hormone secretion.

The reason Linfoot decided to stay in the San Francisco area is related mostly to the nature of the important research he has been committed to for the past 17 years at Berkeley. He is chief of the Donner Pavilion at Berkeley, a world famous center specializing in the use of beams of high energy alpha particles to treat patients suffering with cancer and other disorders of the pituitary gland.

The pea-sized pituitary gland is located at the base of the brain and is the key to the body's endocrine system, both producing hormones and controlling the hormone production of other glands in the body. Linfoot's work at the Donner Pavillion is just one part of the research operations of the sprawling Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, overlooking San Francisco Bay from the hills above the campus.

The laboratory is named after Nobel Prize-winning scientist Ernest Lawrence, who invented the cyclotron there in 1929 to give the world an amazing tool to study nuclear physics.

December 31 is near!

Gifts you make to the University of North Dakota Foundation before year's end will be deductible on your 1978 income tax return!

This year it makes particularly good tax sense to establish the largest possible itemized deduction. In 1979, some itemized deductions will no longer be available, and, because tax rates will be lower, the saving resulting from a deduction will be smaller.

accelerators, with such exotic names as "SuperHILAC," are in use at Berkeley to help scientists achieve what they hope will be an eventual, comprehensive understanding of matter and the forces that act upon it.

The accelerator involves a process akin to whirling a ball on an elastic string. Tiny charged particles known as ions are accelerated inside a vacuum tank placed between the poles of an electromagnet, which bends their path into a circular orbit. With each revolution, an electrode gives the beam of particles a forward push and a bit more energy. Eventually the particles reach a velocity of more than 99 percent of the speed of light, and an energy of 6.3 million electron volts.

At this point, a "target" atom is inserted into the path of the accelerated particles. Acting as a bullet, the speeding particles strike and disrupt the target atomic nuclei, producing particles which did not exist prior to the collision. These particles can be measured and studied so as to contribute to the understanding of the nature of matter. In the past few years, for example, accelerator research has expanded the periodic table, familiar to all chemistry students, from 92 elements to 105. Alpha particle pituitary irradiation shows promise of helping medical science cope with the vascular complications of diabetes, which can lead to blindness or death. Success has been achieved in learning to control diabetes itself, Linfoot said, but this has resulted in more persons being exposed to the long term complications of the disease.

Linfoot also pursues his interest in nuclear medicine and in the study of hormones at his private endocrine and metabolic laboratory at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley. Involved is the measurement of infinitesimal amounts of hormones in ways much faster than earlier methods.

Linfoot and his Alta Bates colleagues attracted newspaper headlines when they developed a pregnancy test based upon the detection of a hormone called chorionic gonodotrophin which is produced in a woman's womb almost from the moment of conception. If there is a trace of it, she is pregnant, if none, she is not. As a result, Linfoot said, the test works in as little as six days, versus the previous urine tests which do not work for 10 to 12 weeks.

In recalling his UND days, Linfoot frequently mentions Professor Helge Ederstrom, who retired this spring from the physiology department. It was Ederstrom who first excited him about scientific research, he said. The two of them once co-authored an article on the topic of how dogs trigger their body's heat loss mechanism by panting.

Linfoot's work involves harnessing the beam of charged particles for medical purposes. The beam is extracted from the cyclotron and is used to irradiate living tissue. After years of experiments with test animals, the cyclotron beam was first used to treat patients in 1954. Linfoot joined the Lab in 1961, and has been intimately involved with this procedure ever since.

The use of alpha particle beams for heavy ion therapy of pituitary tumors is an internationally recognized procedure, Linfoot said, although there are only a few places in the world where it can be done. Nearly all patients, some of whom have suffered the sometimes grotesque symptoms caused by runaway glands, have benefited subjectively and objectively, he said.

Long-term followup on his patients makes possible a unique investigation of the biological properties of the human pituitary, he said. As a result of the work being done at Berkeley, scientists are beginning to better understand the disorders of the internal secretions associated with the pituitary, as well as the long-term effects of high energy particle beams on Most of Linfoot's recent scientific publications — and the list has 67 entries are related to his work at Donner Pavilion with pituitary tumors.

Linfoot's long curriculum vitae, however, contains evidence that he has not emersed himself entirely into the time consuming world of medical research. Under memberships and honors, not far from a note on his status as a diplomate of the American Board of Medical Examiners, is the information that he is a member of the Royal Order of Jesters and Aahmes Alchemists' Clowns.

Linfoot, it turns out, also is an expert in the art of clowning. "Although I do not get out often, I do enjoy this little change of pace," he commented about the hobby.

ALUMNI REVIEW

Former UND student earns top military post

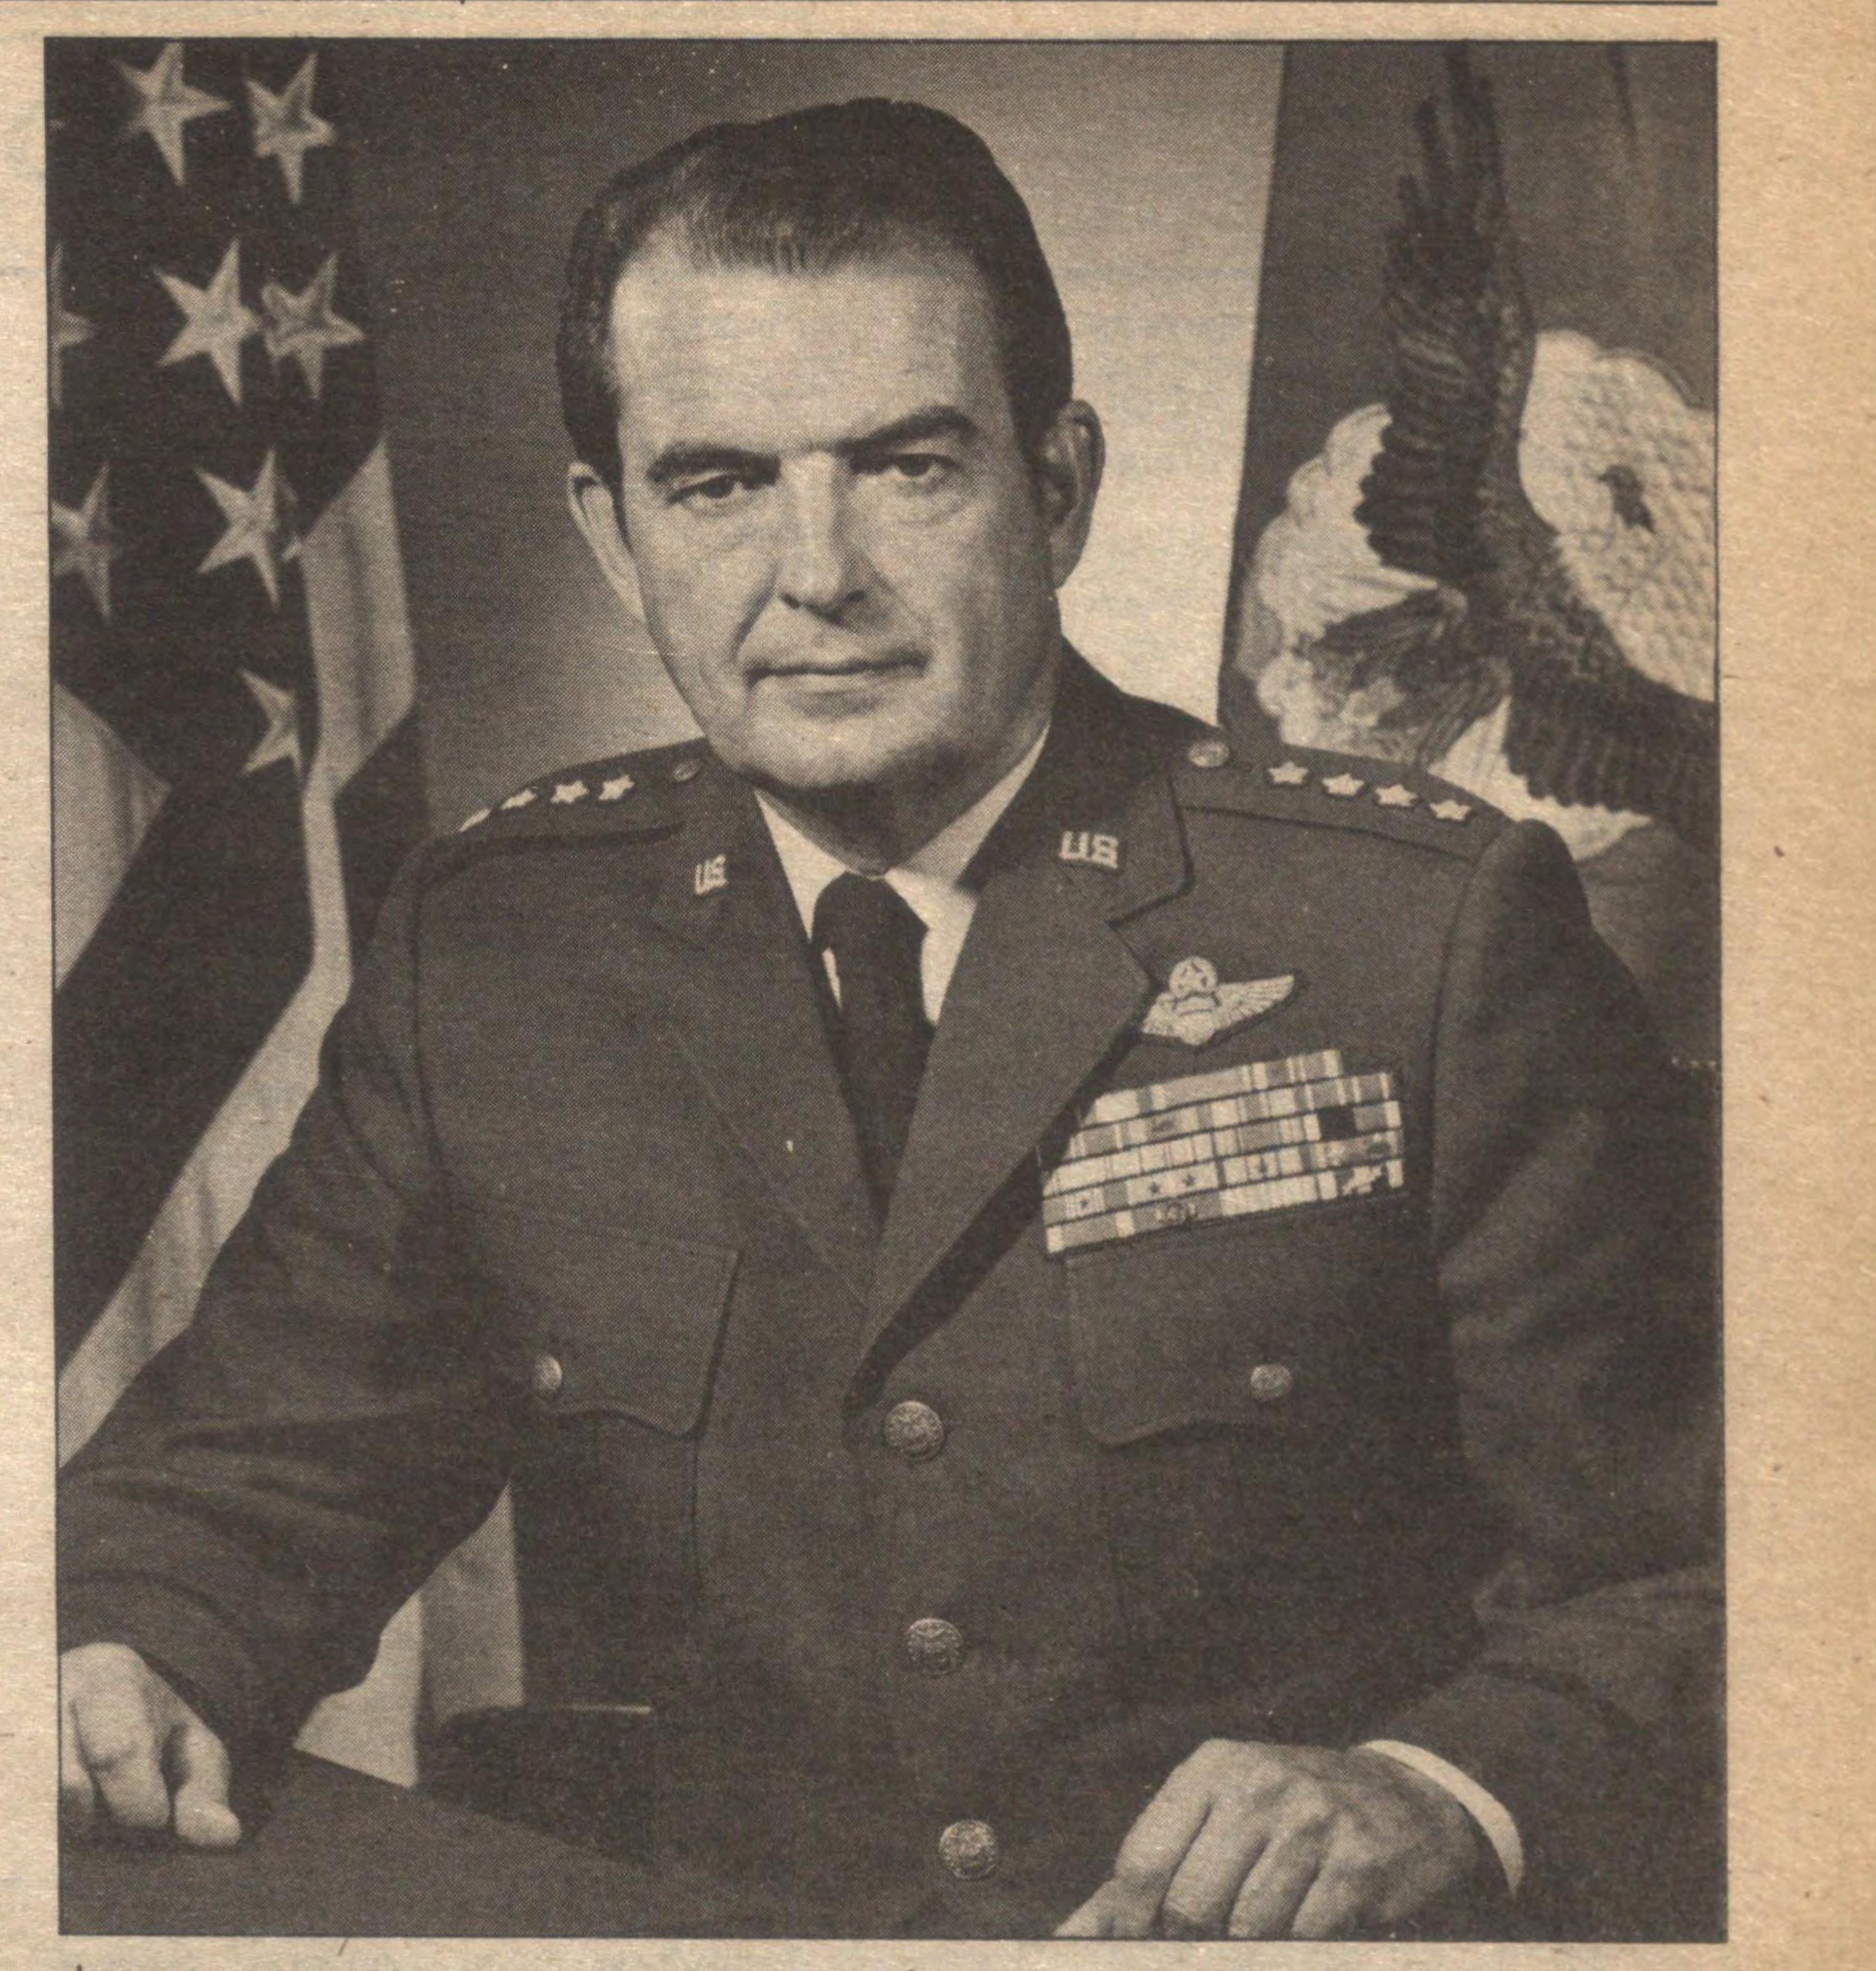

By DENNIS DOCKTER

When David Jones was a student at the University of North Dakota back in 1941, the National Security Council didn't exist and the offices of the President and Secretary of Defense probably seemed like intangible powers far beyond reach to the young man.

Today, he is General David Jones and as the recently appointed Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the UND alumnus serves as the top military adviser to the President, the Secretary of Defense and the National Security Council. Certainly one of UND's most prominent and distinguished alumni, Jones says his decisions have wide-range implications, transcending mere military bounds. sequently a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He said his adjustment to the chairmanship was made much easier by his serving as acting chairman for a few months before his actual appointment last June 21.

After almost six months as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Jones says his experiences in the position thus far have pretty much matched his expectations and, if anything, have reinforced his previous feelings about problems the U.S. faces today.

"I stated at the ceremony when I was installed as chairman that the days ahead may well be some of the most difficult in our history," Jones said. "As the days have passed, I am more convinced about the severity of the challenges ahead. The complexity of the daily involvements is very great but I have always enjoyed demanding situations."

"The decisions that are made and the advice that is put forth cross over service lines and involve all aspects of national security," Jones said recently.

Jones' list of military accomplishments achieved during the last 25 years fill several typewritten pages. His decorations and service awards are endless. His service record is impressive indeed.

Jones, who was born July 9, 1921 in Aberdeen, S.D., graduated from high school in 1939 at Minot, N.D., which he still calls his hometown. He attended the University of North Dakota and Minot State College before marrying the former Lois M. Tarbell of Rugby, N.D. in January 1942. He continued his education several years later and graduated in 1960 from the National War College at Washington; D.C.

Entering the Army Air Corps in April 1942, Jones earned his commission and pilot wings from Flying School in Roswell, N.M. in February 1943. During the Korean War, Jones accumulated more than 300 hours flying missions over North Korea. In 1969 he served as Deputy Commander for Operations and Vice Commander of the Seventh Air Force in Vietnam. Jones meets with the president frequently and says he has found Carter "receptive to military advice." But the General is very concerned about the need for better U.S. military capability and preparedness. He is a strong advocate of the "readiness NOW" approach to the problem.

"I believe that any future encounters will have a time compression that will not permit us much leadtime," he said. "Therefore, if the military is to uphold its portion of our national strategy, we must be prepared to meet any adversary on a moment's notice."

Another challenge that Jones feels threatens the U.S. is what he terms the "impressive buildup" in Soviet military capability.

"We have tended, over the years, to disbelieve the evidence of slowly gathering clouds on the horizon," he said. "Somehow, we seem to have become distracted by complacency and by the immediate concerns of the moment. Jones

"Any sudden and dramatic Soviet achievement could cause a precipitous change in world perceptions, just as Sputnik electrified the world in October 1957 with the impression that the Soviets were far ahead of the United States in space technology," he said.

Jones believes that whatever the outcome of the Strategic Arms Limitations negotiations, it will be necessary to spend more on strategic forces.

"The increase needn't be as large with an equitable SALT agreement as without," he said, "but in either event, we will have to do more in this area." The central security challenge of the 1980s, according to the UND alumnus, will be to deny the Soviets any incentive to pursue options based on an edge in military strength.

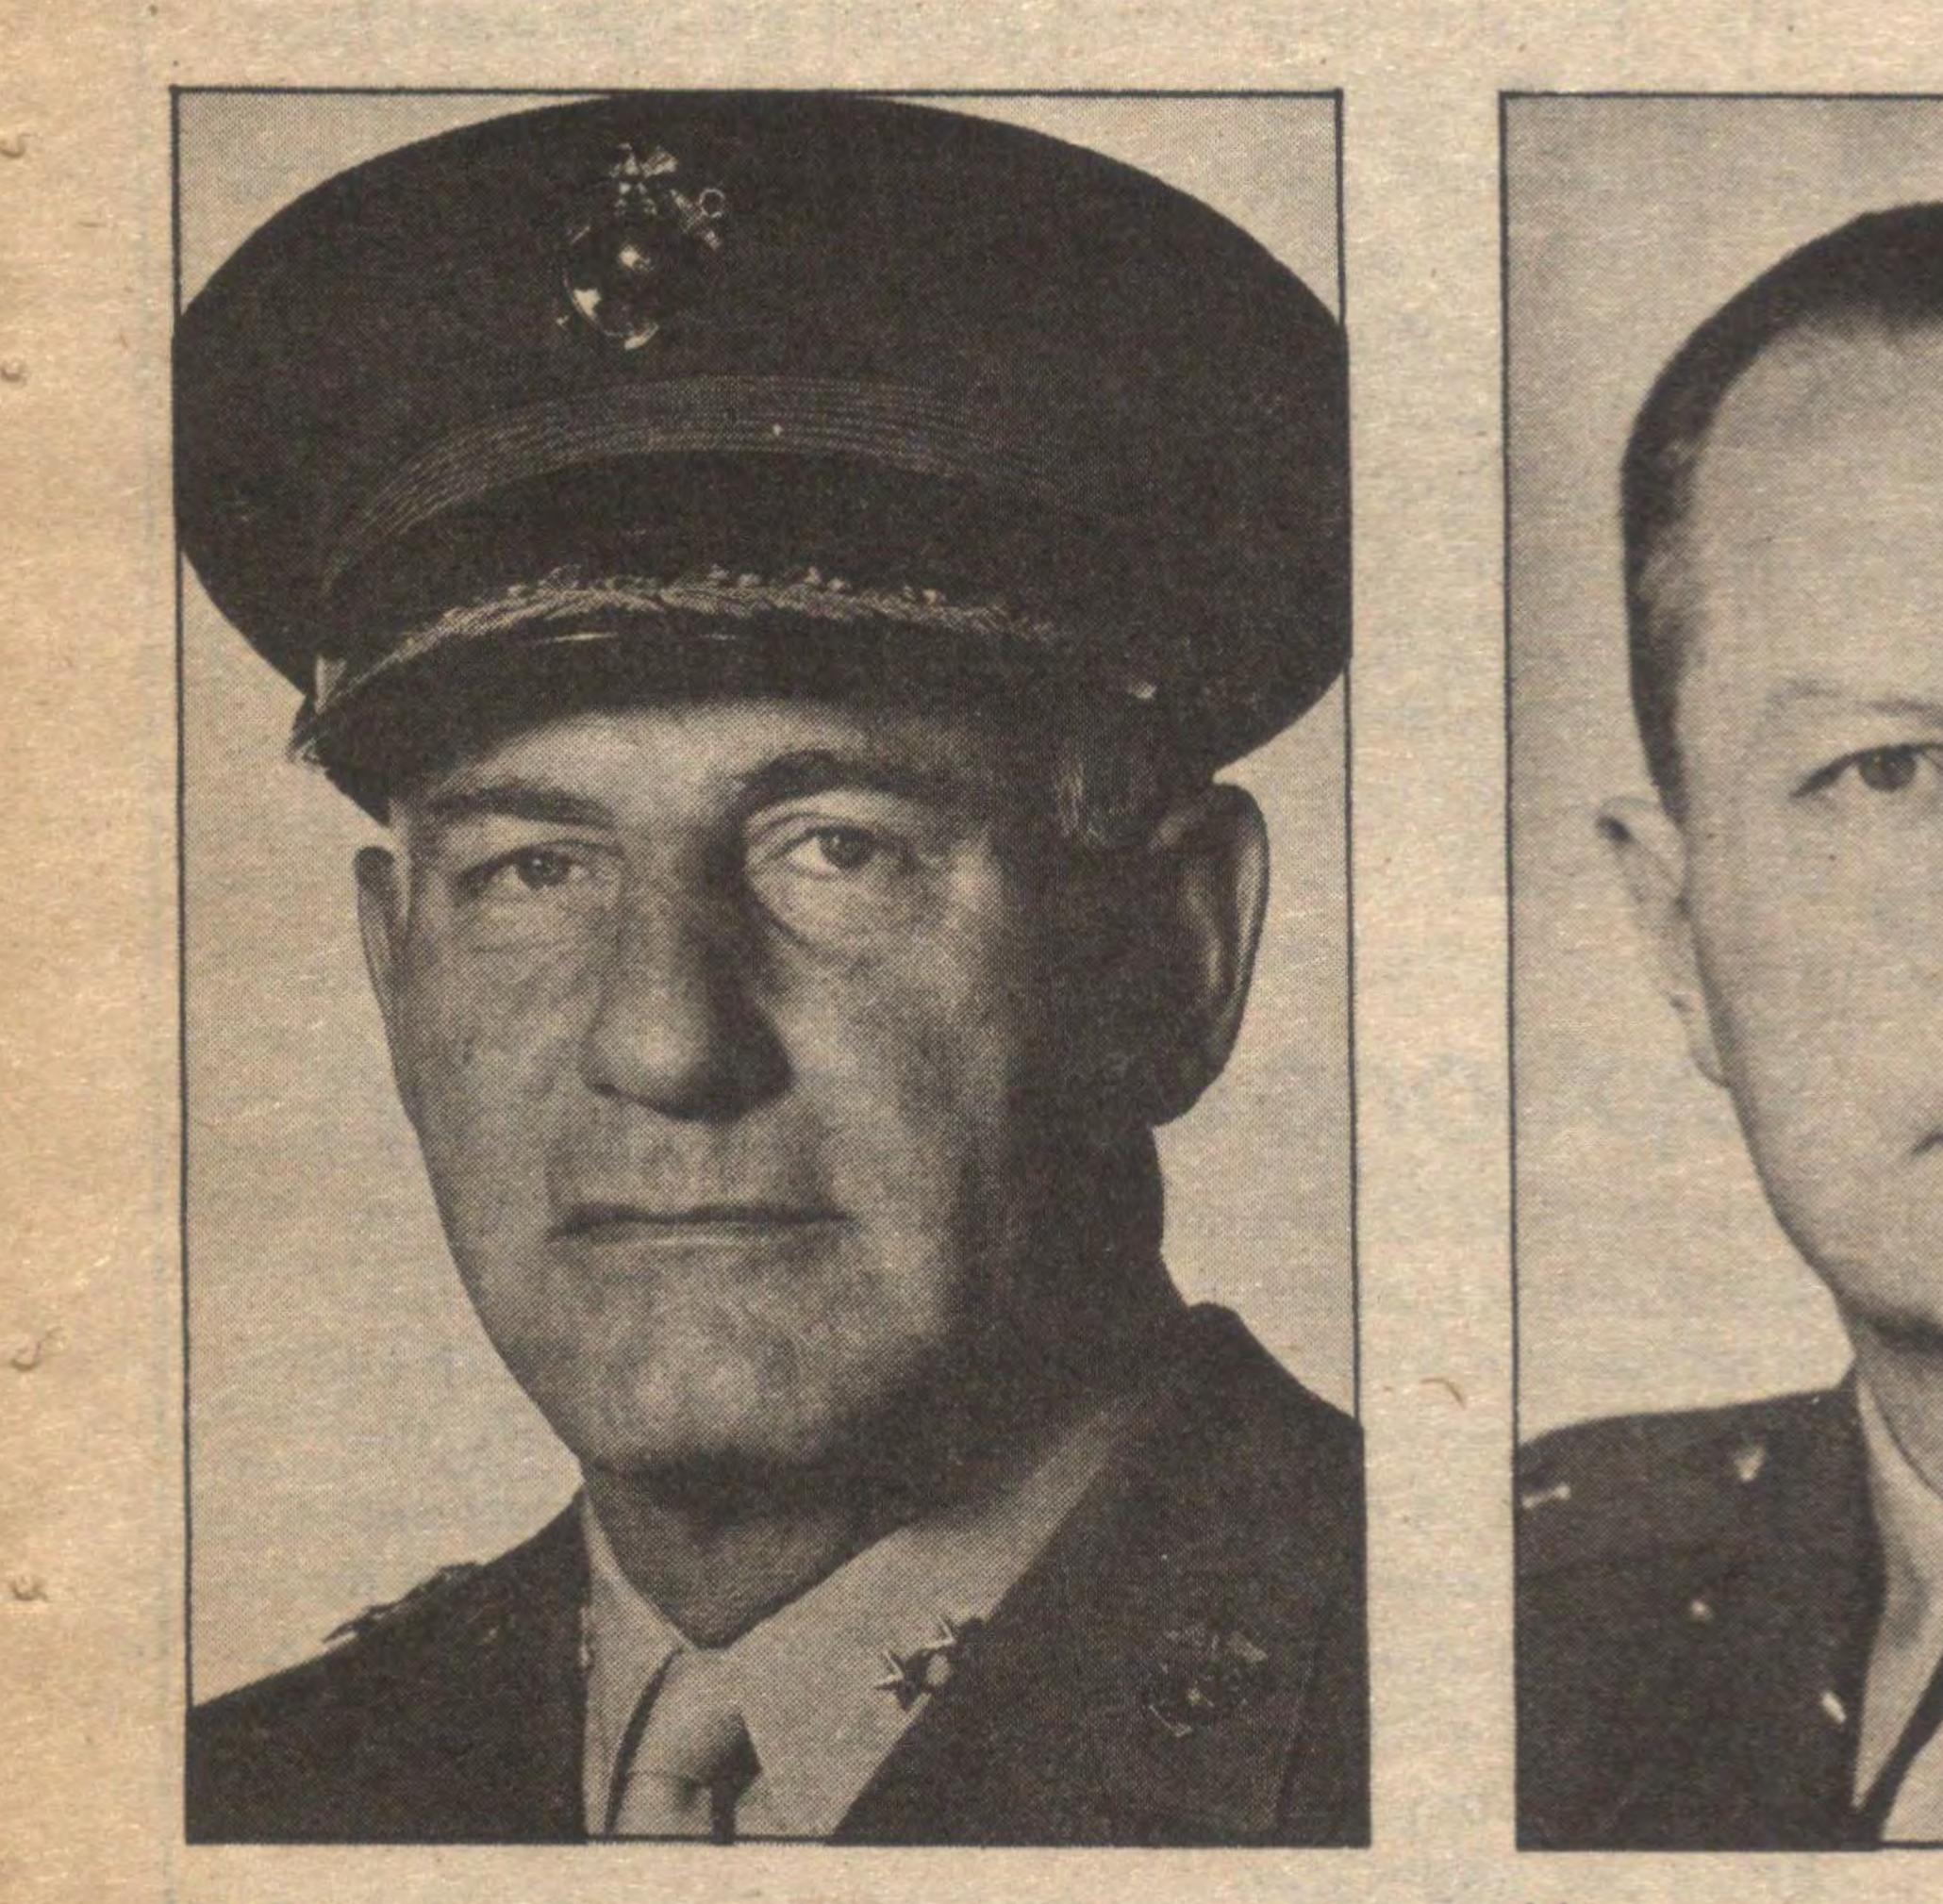

PAGE FIVE

Despite what might sound like a rather pessimistic forecast for the days ahead, Jones insists that he is not "sounding an alarm" or suggesting that the United States embark on a crash program.

"What I am suggesting, and have suggested to my civilian superiors, is that the United States has the material and moral resources to arrest and reverse these dangerous military trends, and that we will need to increase our defense spending in the years ahead, particularly in the area of strategic forces," he said.

Having served as inspector, operator, planner and Commander in Chief of U.S. Air Forces in Europe, Jones has dealt with every facet of the military forces in the continent. Concurrent with duty as Commander in Chief of USAFE, he was Commander of the Fourth Allied Tactical Air Force and led the way toward establishing the integrated air headquarters in NATO's Central Region, Allied Air Forces, Central Europe.

Prior to his current appointment, the father of three served four years as Chief of Staff of the U.S. Air Force and was sub-

"Taking into account all their vulnerabilities and weaknesses," he added, "we must still face the cold, hard fact of the priority in people and resources the Soviet Union accords to military power... There is no escaping the fact that the Soviets have for years continued to outman, out-gun, out-develop, out-build and out-deploy us in most meaningful military categories, all the while shortening our qualitative lead in many important areas."

Jones likens the situation to skating on thin ice with the ice getting thinner.

Even with all the problems and potential difficulties Jones perceives, he still sees the United States with the superior hand.

"I wouldn't swap our present military capability with that of the Soviet Union, nor would I want to trade the broader problems each country faces," he said. "I believe that, by demonstrating that we will not be surpassed, we can force the strategic competition with the Soviet Union away from the military sphere and toward areas where the risks of violence are less and the incentive for negotiated force reductions are greater."

Women's basketball

The first annual women's basketball alumnae and "old-timers" game will be held Saturday, Jan. 20, 1979 in the UND Fieldhouse Arena in conjunction with the Sioux Green and White Dynamite Weekend. All women who played basketball at UND at any time are invited to participate. An "old-timers" game is scheduled for 2 p.m. in the Fieldhouse and will be followed by a 3 p.m. game between the women's varsity team and alumnae. Proceeds from the $1 admission charge to the public will go to the Women's Athletic Scholarship Fund. Because some records of past players burned in the old women's gym fire, help is needed to locate the present whereabouts of some of the alumnae. Contact Dee Watson or Pat Warcup at the UND Fieldhouse, P.O. Box 8175, Grand Forks, ND 58202 for more information.

Rose moved in and eventually became the local chapter president.

There were 24 members in the fraternity in Rose's senior year and about 2,500 students in the entire university.

"We all studied hard and played hard and loved it."

But then he talked again about a lark from his university days.

Right before his graduation, Rose was instrumental in organizing a game of poker with two people from each fraternity on campus participating.

"We rented a suite in the Ryan Hotel, pulled two tables together, threw blankets on the tables and began playing for money.'

Rose says the game continued well into the morning until a knock sounded at the door about 3 a.m.

Three policemen stormed into the room demanding to know if they were seniors and if they were playing poker. "Put your hands behind your head," they said.

After the dramatic entrance and a long lecture, the police told the students to continue with the game — and left.

"We didn't continue it," Rose said, even though they "were playing for the glory of Lambda Chi - plus $25."

Where are they now? Beck sends greetings to students, colleagues

By DAVE VORLAND

Not many University of North Dakota professors fortunate enough to reach their 80th birthday have received personal congratulations from the president and prime minister of a foreign country to mark the occasion.

But that's exactly what happened last year to Dr. Richard Beck, University Professor emeritus of languages. The birthday greetings from high dignitaries of the government of Iceland were in recognition of Dr. Beck's contributions to Icelandic culture over the period of his long, productive lifetime.

Dr. Beck retired from the University faculty in 1967, after 38 years of service, and now lives with his wife Margaret in Victoria, British Columbia. In the years since he left the campus, the University has tried to maintain the kind of serious interest in all things Scandinavian that Dr. Beck exemplified. A Scandinavian Cultural Center, for example, was established in 1970. one-third the population, is warmly reciprocated. For many years Dr. Beck has been considered one of Iceland's finest native sons living abroad.

His prestige in his native homeland, for example, resulted in his being invited to speak on June 17, 1944, on the occasion of the founding of the Icelandic Republic. In the summer of 1974 he was again a special guest of the Icelandic government and delivered two addresses to help mark the 1,100th anniversary of the settlement of Iceland.

Dr. Beck has received many honors for his achievements as a teacher, scholar, writer and poet. In 1969, the University of North Dakota conferred upon him an honorary doctor of literature degree. He joyed living in Victoria, which has a large Icelandic community, and, appropriately enough, is situated on an island. Mrs. Beck was born and grew up in Victoria, where her parents were among the earliest and most prominent Icelandic settlers. As you might expect, one of Dr. Beck's first retirement projects was to publish a history of the Icelanders on Vancouver Island.

"Mrs. Beck joins me in rejoicing in the great progress of the University of North Dakota," he wrote in his letter. "To our many former and present friends there, my former colleagues and students, she joins me also in sending warm greetings and best wishes. The University of North Dakota will always be my University, and Mrs. Beck gratefully shares the memory of our years there."

Friends wishing to write to Dr. and Mrs. Beck may reach them at 28 Marlborough Street, Victoria, B.C., Canada V8V 4A5.

Even so, say the many faculty and alumni who remember Dr. Beck, it just isn't the same not having a genuine Icelandic diplomat in residence with Dr. Beck's flair for impressive ceremony. For a quarter of a century at UND, Dr. Beck was honorary consul of Iceland for North Dakota, and in that capacity represented the Icelandic government on many significant occasions.

Iceland, where Dr. Beck was born and grew to early manhood before taking his advanced degrees at Cornell University, has a special place in his heart, although he speaks and writes fluently in Norwegian as well.

His deep feelings for the small island in the North Atlantic, just a bit more than half the size of North Dakota and with just has two honorary doctorates from the University of Iceland.

In his history of the University of North Dakota, Dr. Louis Geiger notes that Dr. Beck brought distinction to UND as a publishing scholar in an era when most faculty limited themselves to classroom instruction. During his UND tenure, Dr. Beck published 15 books and more than 500 articles.

And he didn't end this activity with retirement. Just last year he delivered major addresses at the meeting of the Society for the Advancement of Scandinavian Studies in Seattle, and saw publication in Iceland of a book of his recent poems and speeches.

In a letter to the Alumni Review recently, Dr. Beck noted that he has lost much of his eyesight in the past two years, which has limited his composition to what he can dictate to his wife Margaret. But, he says, he wears special glasses which enable him to read letters — especially those which have been typewritten — and shorter articles.

Since retirement the Becks have en-
