Bjella chairs $25 million drive

Undertaking marks UND's Centennial

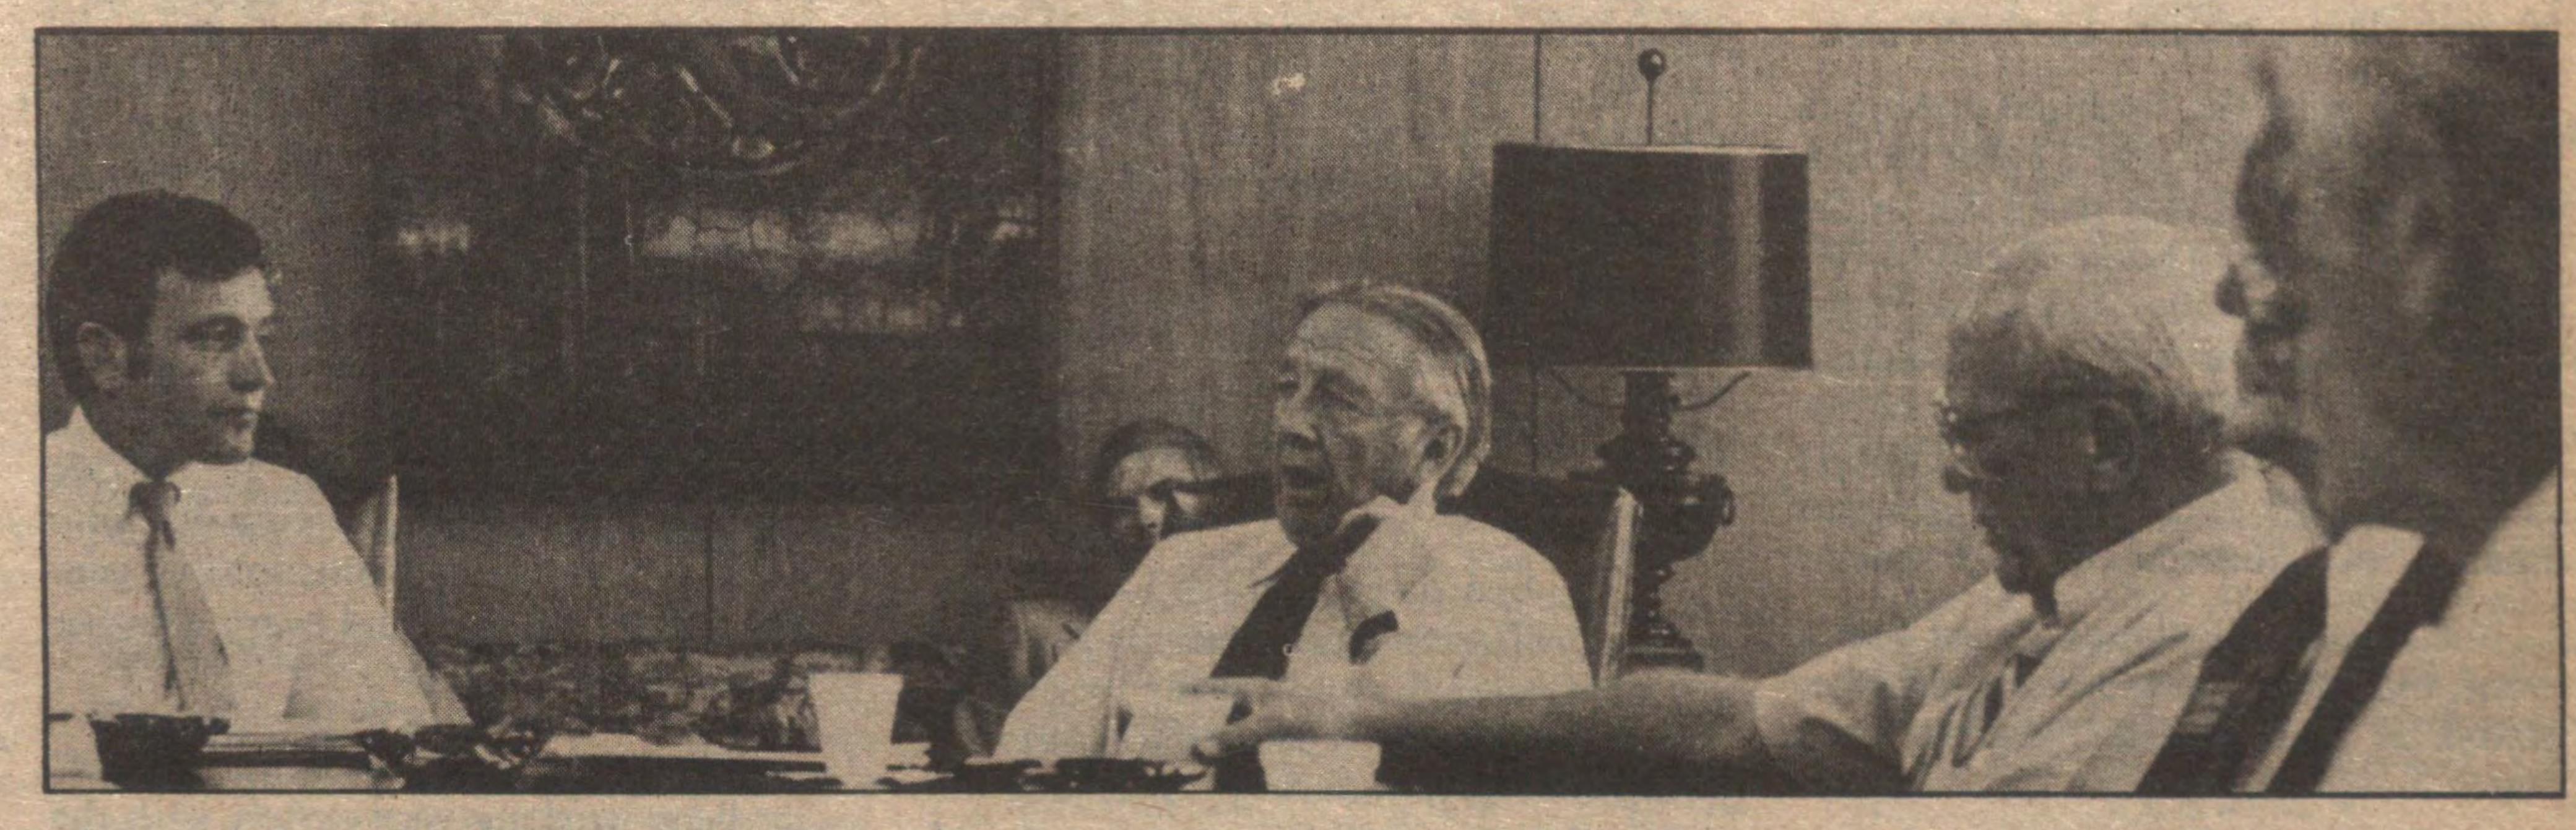

Arley R. Bjella, '41, chairman of the board of Lutheran Brotherhood, has accepted the national chairmanship of the $25 million UND Foundation Centennial Drive.

The announcement of Bjella's appointment to the key leadership position in the upcoming campaign was the highlight of the semiannual meeting on campus of the Board of Directors of the UND Alumni Association and Foundation. University President Thomas J. Clifford, Association President Merlin Dewing and Association Executive Vice President Earl Strinden had approached the nationally known insurance executive several months ago about taking the job, and, together with other alumni and UND officials, had held a series of meetings with him to discuss the Centennial Drive.

"Arley did not take on this responsibility lightly," Dewing told the alumni board as he introduced Bjella during Alumni Days. "He had to be convinced that we were serious in this $25 million drive, that we understood the principles of high-level fund-raising, and that the Foundation and the University were committed to devoting the resources and the time of their best people necessary to conduct a drive of this magnitude. The fact that Arley accepted the assignment, after much serious reflection, is a tremendous vote of confidence in the goals we have set."

ALUMNI REVIEW

UND Alumni Association President Merlin Dewing, '56, '58, left, looks on as Arley Bjella, '41, center, national chairman of the UND Foundation Centennial Drive, addresses Association and Foundation board members during their regular meeting during Alumni Days. Bjella briefed the board on plans for the UND Centennial.

Bjella's decision to lead the Centennial Drive also received the enthusiastic endorsement of Foundation President Jim Seifert and Clifford.

Said Seifert: "When the Board of Directors, a year ago, discussed the need for outstanding volunteer leadership in the Centennial campaign, Arley Bjella's name received enthusiastic and unanimous response. He is an outstanding individual with a strong dedication to his home state and his alma mater."

Said Clifford: "Arley Bjella is one of UND's outstanding graduates. His dedication and loyalty to the University of North Dakota is truly of unusual proportion. We are pleased and honored that he has accepted the National Chairmanship."

Strinden said full details of the UND Foundation Centennial Drive will be announced in the October 1982 issue of Alumni Review, Bjella will head a group of prestigious UND alumni strategically located around the country, who in turn will marshal the efforts of other volunteers.

The Foundation, Strinden stressed, has opted not to bring in a so-called "professional" fund-raising organization, feeling that such organizations all too often utilize inappropriate, highpressure approaches to soliciting contributions. Instead, the volunteer structure will rely upon the Foundation and University staff for the necessary support services.

"The marathon race — in contrast to the 100-yard dash — can be used to describe the philosophy of the UND Alumni Association and the UND Foundation," Strinden said. "The staff takes a genuine interest in the individual members of the alumni family. There is Merlin Dewing was re-elected president of the University of North Dakota Alumni Association and Jim Seifert was elected president of the UND Foundation in board and officer elections held on campus during 1982 UND Alumni Days last month.

Gerald Skogley, UND vice president for finance, was re-elected treasurer and Earl Strinden executive vice president and secretary for both the Association and the Foundation.

New members of the Association and Foundation Boards of Directors, elected for three-year terms, are Ralph Krogfoss, '43, of San Mateo, Calif., and Dr. Don McIntyre, '57, of Rugby, N.D. They succeed retiring board members Lowell Swenson, ex '43, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who also served as president of the UND Foundation, and E. F. Fox Jr., '48, of Billings, Mont. Thomas Fitterer, '64, of Santa Ana, Calif., was elected to fill the remaining year in the term of the late Betty Peterson, '41, '56, of Grand Forks.

Elected to their second three-year board terms were Seifert and JoAnne Bridston Hedlin, while Dewing, Don Miller of Austin, Texas, and David Vaaler of Grand Forks were each elected to third terms on the boards.

Dewing, '56, '58, is beginning his second year as Association president. A native of Portal, N.D., he now lives in Golden Valley, Minn., and serves as managing partner in the Minneapolis-St. Paul offices of the accounting firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. He is also active in professional and civic groups. While at UND, he was a member of Delta Tau Delta and the Beta Alpha Psi honorary accounting fraternity. He and his wife Barbara (McConachie), '57, have three children.

Seifert, '56, is a native of Fargo, N.D. A 1971 Sioux Award recipient, he is president of Seifert's clothing stores, and served this past year as Foundation first vice president. He and his wife Nancy (Dunlevy), '51, live in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Also re-elected during Alumni Days were Jim Kack, '63, of Bozeman, Mont., as Alumni Association first vice president, and Hedlin, '51, St. Paul, Minn., as Association second vice president. Foundation officers are Bernold (Bruno) Hanson, '51, of Midland, Texas, first vice president, and Louise Aandahl Stockman, '48, of Fargo, second vice president.

Kack, a native of Dickinson, N.D., has served as a director since 1975, the same year he received the Sioux Award. He and his wife Joanne (Schafer), '63, manage several business ventures in Bozeman and have three sons.

Hedlin is a Grand Forks native who now lives in St. Paul, Minn. and Marco Island, Florida. She is married to Warren Hedlin, '52.

Hanson is president of Hanson Corp., an independent oil exploration company with headquarters in Midland, Texas. He received the Sioux Award in 1978, 10 years after the Explorer's Club named him "Wildcatter of the Year." He and his wife Marilyn have three children.

Stockman, who is beginning the second year of her first term as a director, is a member of many Fargo area civic and cultural organizations. The valedictorian of the Class of '48, she and her husband Jacque, '49, '50, have four children.

Report from campus

By Earl Strinden Alumni Assoc. Executive V-P

Class of '32 turns out a record

Alumni Days 1982 exceeded our expectations, with a record number of 50-year class members in attendance.

Along with the traditional Alumni Days activities, this year's event included an open house and reception in the beautifully restored home of early UND presidents, now the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center. An act from Flickertail Follies was a part of the program at our Wednesday evening dinner, and a style show of clothes of '32 and '42 eras was a part of our Thursday noon program.

We are already planning next year's event, including a number of special reunions as part of UND's Centennial year.

Congratulations to Sioux Award winners, President Tom and Florence Clifford and Andy Freeman, and to Bill Leidholdt and Gene Revell, inductees into the Fighting Sioux Hall of Fame! These awards highlighted our annual Alumni Days banquet. We are again reminded of the outstanding achievers who have graduated from UND. This is very much a part of the great University of North Dakota tradition.

Board members' service vital

I have spoken before about the important role of the Board of Directors of the UND Alumni Association and the UND Foundation in shaping the planning and programming for your Association.

These dedicated individuals serve without pay or expense reimbursement. For some board members, attending the twice-a-year meetings on campus means traveling a long distance at considerable expense. Because we have graduates in many disciplines and alumni in every state in the nation, the nominating committee makes a real effort to balance the board makeup by careers and geography.

The Board of Directors met for two days during Alumni Days to finalize plans for the Centennial. Members allocated funding for scholarships and other priority projects at UND and took care of other Association and Foundation matters. The UND Foundation balance sheet, which is included in this issue, is testimony to the excellent planning and involvement by each individual member of the board.

A well-deserved "thank you" to retiring board members Lowell Swenson, president of the UND Foundation, and Fran Fox. Both Fran and Lowell have completed the maximum of nine years or three terms as members of the Board of Directors. At the same time, we welcome Dr. Don McIntyre, Ralph Krogfoss and Tom Fitterer as new members of the board.

Arley at the helm for Centennial Drive

In this issue we announce Arley Bjella as national chairman of the UND Foundation Centennial Drive. Arley and Beverly were here for Alumni Days and to meet with the board about the Centennial campaign and to discuss plans for involving every member of our alumni family in investing in UND's second century.

Arley is truly one of UND's outstanding achievers. He also has a great pride in his North Dakota and UND background; he jokingly claims a record of having the longest tenure (six years) as a resident of Budge Hall.

We feel fortunate indeed to have Arley Bjella as our national chairman. During the summer, we will be working on the nationwide organization of volunteer leaders. Plans for the Centennial drive will be announced in the October issue of the Alumni Review. Under Arley Bjella's leadership, we are confident of reaching our $25,000,000 goal.

The board began discussing the UND Centennial almost five years ago. We looked very carefully at how we should approach this "once-in-a-century opportunity."

The board rejected the idea of hiring a professional promotional firm and a professional fund-raising organization. Rather, it was decided to utilize the staff of the Alumni Association and the Foundation, University personnel and alumni volunteers in this magnificent effort to make UND's 100th year historic and a year of enjoyable activities involving record numbers of our alumni family members.

We have a very active and a very strong Association. We have worked very hard over the years to create the kind of climate and good will which encourage alumni interest in their alma mater and participation in our alumni events. There has also been a dedicated effort to encourage alumni involvement in our UND Foundation fund-raising programs. Our philosophy is "the marathon race" rather than "the 100-yard dash." We are not an "arm twisting" operation nor do we ever intend to be. We always want to have a genuine interest in our alumni family members.

This is why the board made this important decision. We do not want to turn alumni contact over to outside organizations and individuals who might not share our philosophy or genuine interest in each and every member of our alumni family.

For the past many months, our staff has been working very closely with the University Relations Office, other University personnel and Dean Jack Robertson and his University Centennial Committee in planning a full year of Centennial activities. The full schedule will be announced in the September issue of the Alumni Review.

The board, for some time, recognized a need to increase our staffing to allow us to adequately carry out these significant additional Centennial responsibilities.

In this issue, we are announcing the

In this issue, we are announcing the appointment of Cari Stenseth, who is moving from a part-time student position to a full-time staff member. Cari brings fine credentials to this job, and has proven herself over these past months in a part-time capacity. She will be working very closely with alumni leaders around the nation in arranging UND 100-year birthday parties and the many special reunions planned for the campus during the Centennial year.

Heading for home? Stop and see us!

It is diamond and centennial jubilee season in hometowns across North Dakota. These hometown and all-high-school reunions are great fun.

a well planned, ongoing effort to maintain a climate of good will and awareness which encourage alumni to be involved in alumni activities and to be contributors to the UND Foundation. This philosophy will be maintained during the Centennial Drive."

Bjella and his wife, the former Beverly Heen, '42, have lived in the Minneapolis area since 1970 when he took the job as chairman and chief executive of Lutheran Brotherhood, a fraternal benefit society serving Lutherans. Since he assumed the society's leadership positions, Lutheran Brotherhood's assets have increased from $521 million to nearly $2 billion. The amount of written insurance has increased from $3.6 billion to $10.8 billion.

This success in the business world was credited by political pundits as the major reason for a highly publicized effort by Republicans in Minnesota this past winter to convince Bjella to run for governor; he declined.

Bjella has been equally successful as a lawyer, serving as senior partner in the law firm of Bjella and Jestrab in Williston before moving to the Twin Cities a dozen years ago.

Bjella's list of professional and service involvements is too long to be adequately summarized. Highlights include president of the Greater Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, president of the Downtown Council of Minneapolis, president of the National Fraternal Congress of America, president of the North Dakota Bar Association, state chairman of the North Dakota Republican Party, member of the UND Alumni Association Board of Directors (1958-1964), regent of Concordia College and directorships of numerous business, professional and charitable organizations. As one would expect, he has been involved in many fund-raising campaigns for worthwhile causes such as the YMCA and the United Way.

Among Bjella's many honors is an honorary doctor of laws from Gettysburg College, the Knight's Cross, First Class, in the Royal Norwegian Order of St. Olav, and in 1974, the UND Alumni Association's Sioux Award.

Bjella holds B.A. and law degrees from UND. In addition to wife Beverly, two of the three Bjella children attended UND: Clara, ex '73, and Brian, '75, '79. Brian's wife Karen (Sylvester) graduated in 1977. Another son, Lance, somehow managed not to enroll at UND despite the best sales efforts of his parents and siblings.

LOST ALUMNI

Can you help us find them?

The University of North Dakota Centennial is approaching, and we are trying to get our address records in the best shape possible. We've lost contact with the people listed below. Some have not been heard from since graduation, some have moved and not sent us a forwarding address, some have married and changed their names, some may have even died. We need your help. If you know where any of these people are, or if they are deceased, drop a note with address or date of death to Alumni Records Supervisor, UND Alumni Association, P.O. Spring 1982 ushered in a series of alumni reunions in cities large and small across North Dakota. Turnout was high at this one in Bismarck.

Dates are Oct. 8-9

Homecoming '82 planning under way

Dedications of two major building additions, special 20- and 25-year class reunions and a gathering of past student leaders will highlight Homecoming '82 on the University of North Dakota campus Oct. 8 and 9.

Detailed schedules are still being worked out, but the special events along with traditional activities such as the Sioux Award banquet, the All-Alumni party in the Grand Forks Civic Auditorium, the football game and numerous open houses and get-togethers will make UND's 64th annual Homecoming one to remember.

Students and faculty members have already become familiar with the Chester Fritz Library addition, which opened in time to be used this past semester, but the 80,000-square-foot addition will be formally dedicated in a ceremony during Homecoming. The addition more than doubles the floor space of the original library, built in 1961 with a $1 million gift from UND alumnus Chester Fritz. Work on the addition began in September 1980.

Also dedicated during Homecoming '82 will be the addition to the Memorial Union. The three-floor addition will include an enlarged bowling and games area, much more space for the UND Bookstore and increased student activity, office and food service areas. A special reunion is being planned for Memorial Union employees from 1955 to 1965. An attempt is being made to compile an invitation list but please drop the Alumni Office a line if you wish further details.

Meanwhile, members of Telesis (the student alumni organization) are planning a reunion of past UND student leaders, offering former members of student government, Dakota Student editors and others a chance to share and compare their experiences and concerns with those of today's UND students. Students also plan to hold a Homecoming parade again this year.

In addition to those events, the Class of 1957 will hold a 25th anniversary reunion, as will the 1957 Law Class. Members of the College of Nursing Class of 1962 are planning a 20th anniversary reunion. A number of other special reunions are also being planned.

The UND aviation department will hold its annual awards banquet during Homecoming, and open houses will be held at UND fraternities and sororities as well as the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center.

Popular Homecoming traditions will round out the 1982 schedule. Former UND students, friends and community members are invited to the All-Alumni Party to be held at the Grand Forks Civic Auditorium. The Sioux Awards Banquet will see several new persons joining a prestigious group of outstanding alumni and new members will be inducted into the Sioux Athletic Hall of Fame at the Annual Letterman's Breakfast. And Thomas J. Clifford will, of course, host the President's Luncheon.

Homecoming would not be complete without the football game. This year's battle pits the Fighting Sioux against the University of Nebraska-Omaha Mavericks at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct.

Alumni can use placement files for years following graduation

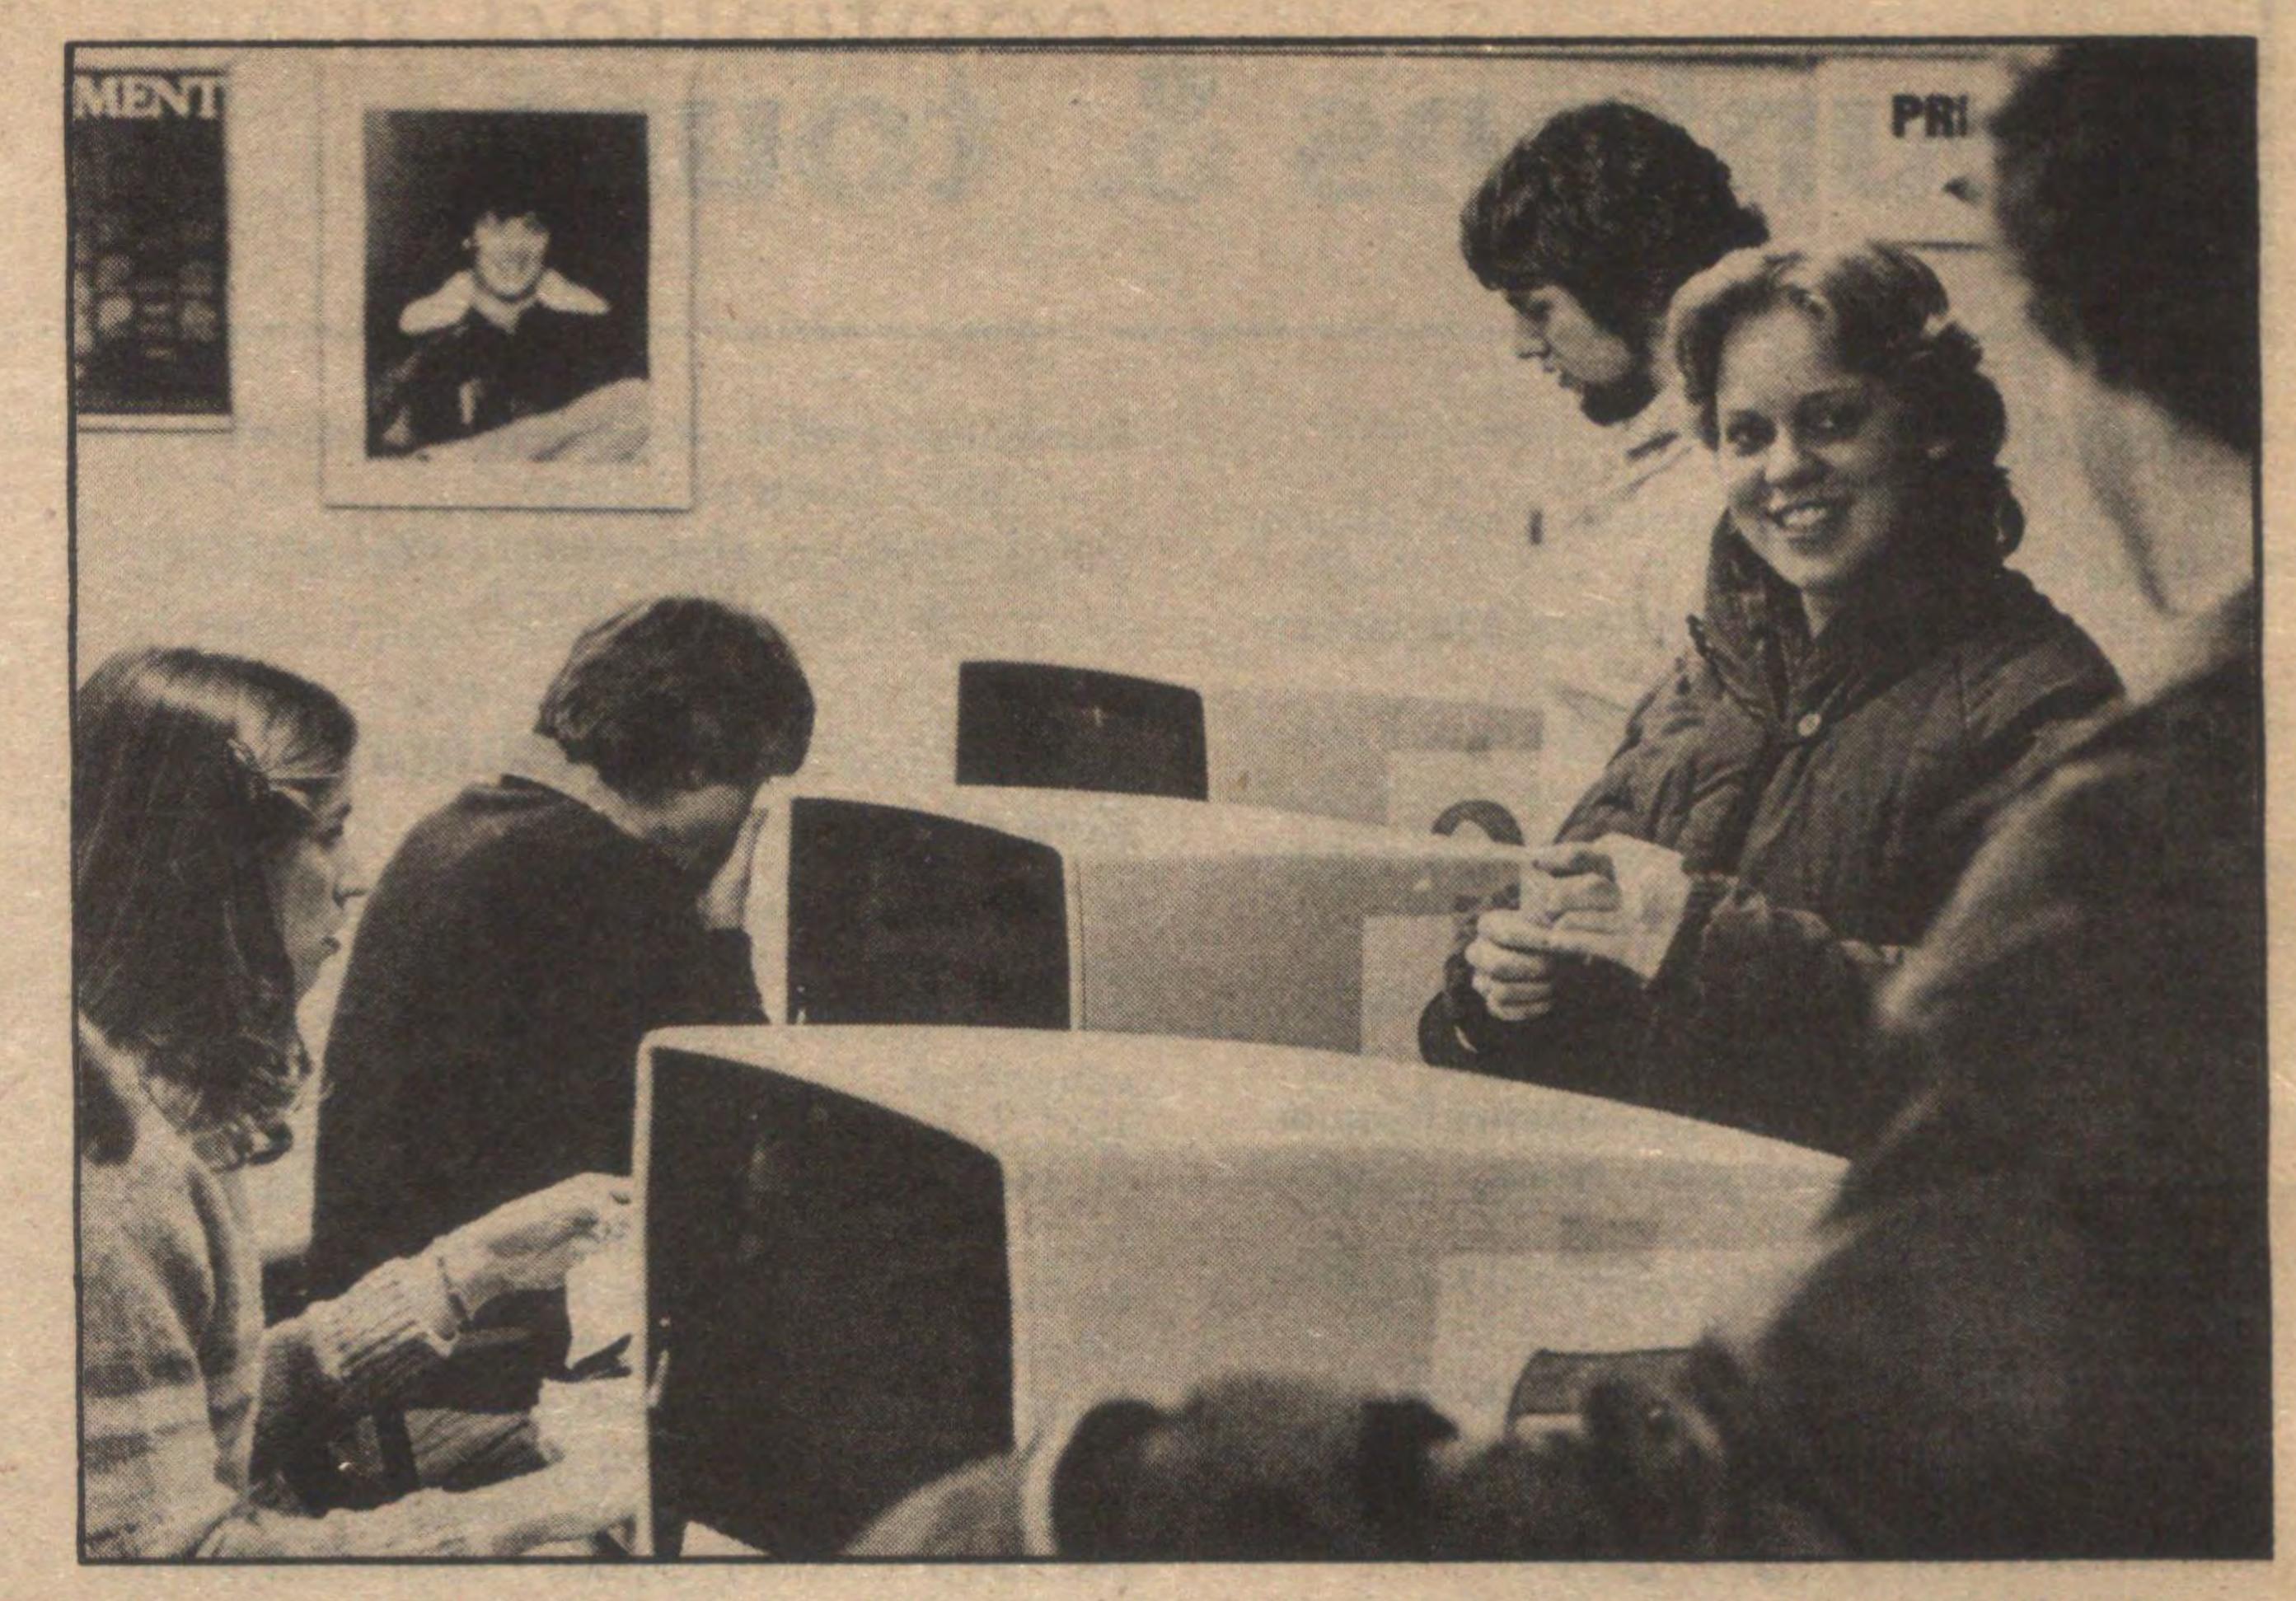

The credentials and resume files at the University of North Dakota Career Planning and Placement Center bulge with references, resumes and other background information on about 15,000 UND graduates — and that figure is growing at a rate of more than 10 percent a year.

The sheer, staggering numbers of such files put a stiff strain on the center's storage area, so two years ago when the center remodeled its offices center officials established a policy of purging files that had not been used within the preceding eight years, according to Liz Morque, associate director and Job Service manager at the center.

"At the end of eight years, most of this information has become somewhat outdated anyway," Morque explained. "And we desperately need the storage space."

About 70 percent of each graduating class starts credential files at the center, she said. Those files will be kept active for eight years, and whenever a graduate asks that a copy of the file be sent to a potential employer, the file begins another eight-year active period. Moreover, Morque said, graduates can, and are encouraged to, obtain their own copy of that information — with the exception of any confidential references — within that eight-year period. Files that have not been used for eight years are destroyed, usually during the month of July.

Morque said the center mails out about 9,000 packets of such information each year to potential employers of UND graduates.

More than 6,000 students who will return this fall took the opportunity to register for classes in advance with UND's new on-line computer system. Believe it or not, long lines during registration are now but a part of the University's history. UND expects an eighth straight record enrollment this fall, with the student body of more than 11,000 possible.

Will become 'railroad station'

U's first building lives in model form

By JOHN VANVIG

Two years from now, after the University of North Dakota has entered its second century and its Centennial observances are history, the Old Main building seen in the UND Alumni Association's Centennial film will be put to another use.

"It will revert back to the New River and Pocahontas Railroad Company," states Karl Warden, dean of the UND School of Law and contractor for the film's Old Main building. "It will become the New River and Pocahontas headquarters and union station, with a train shed and passenger facilities."

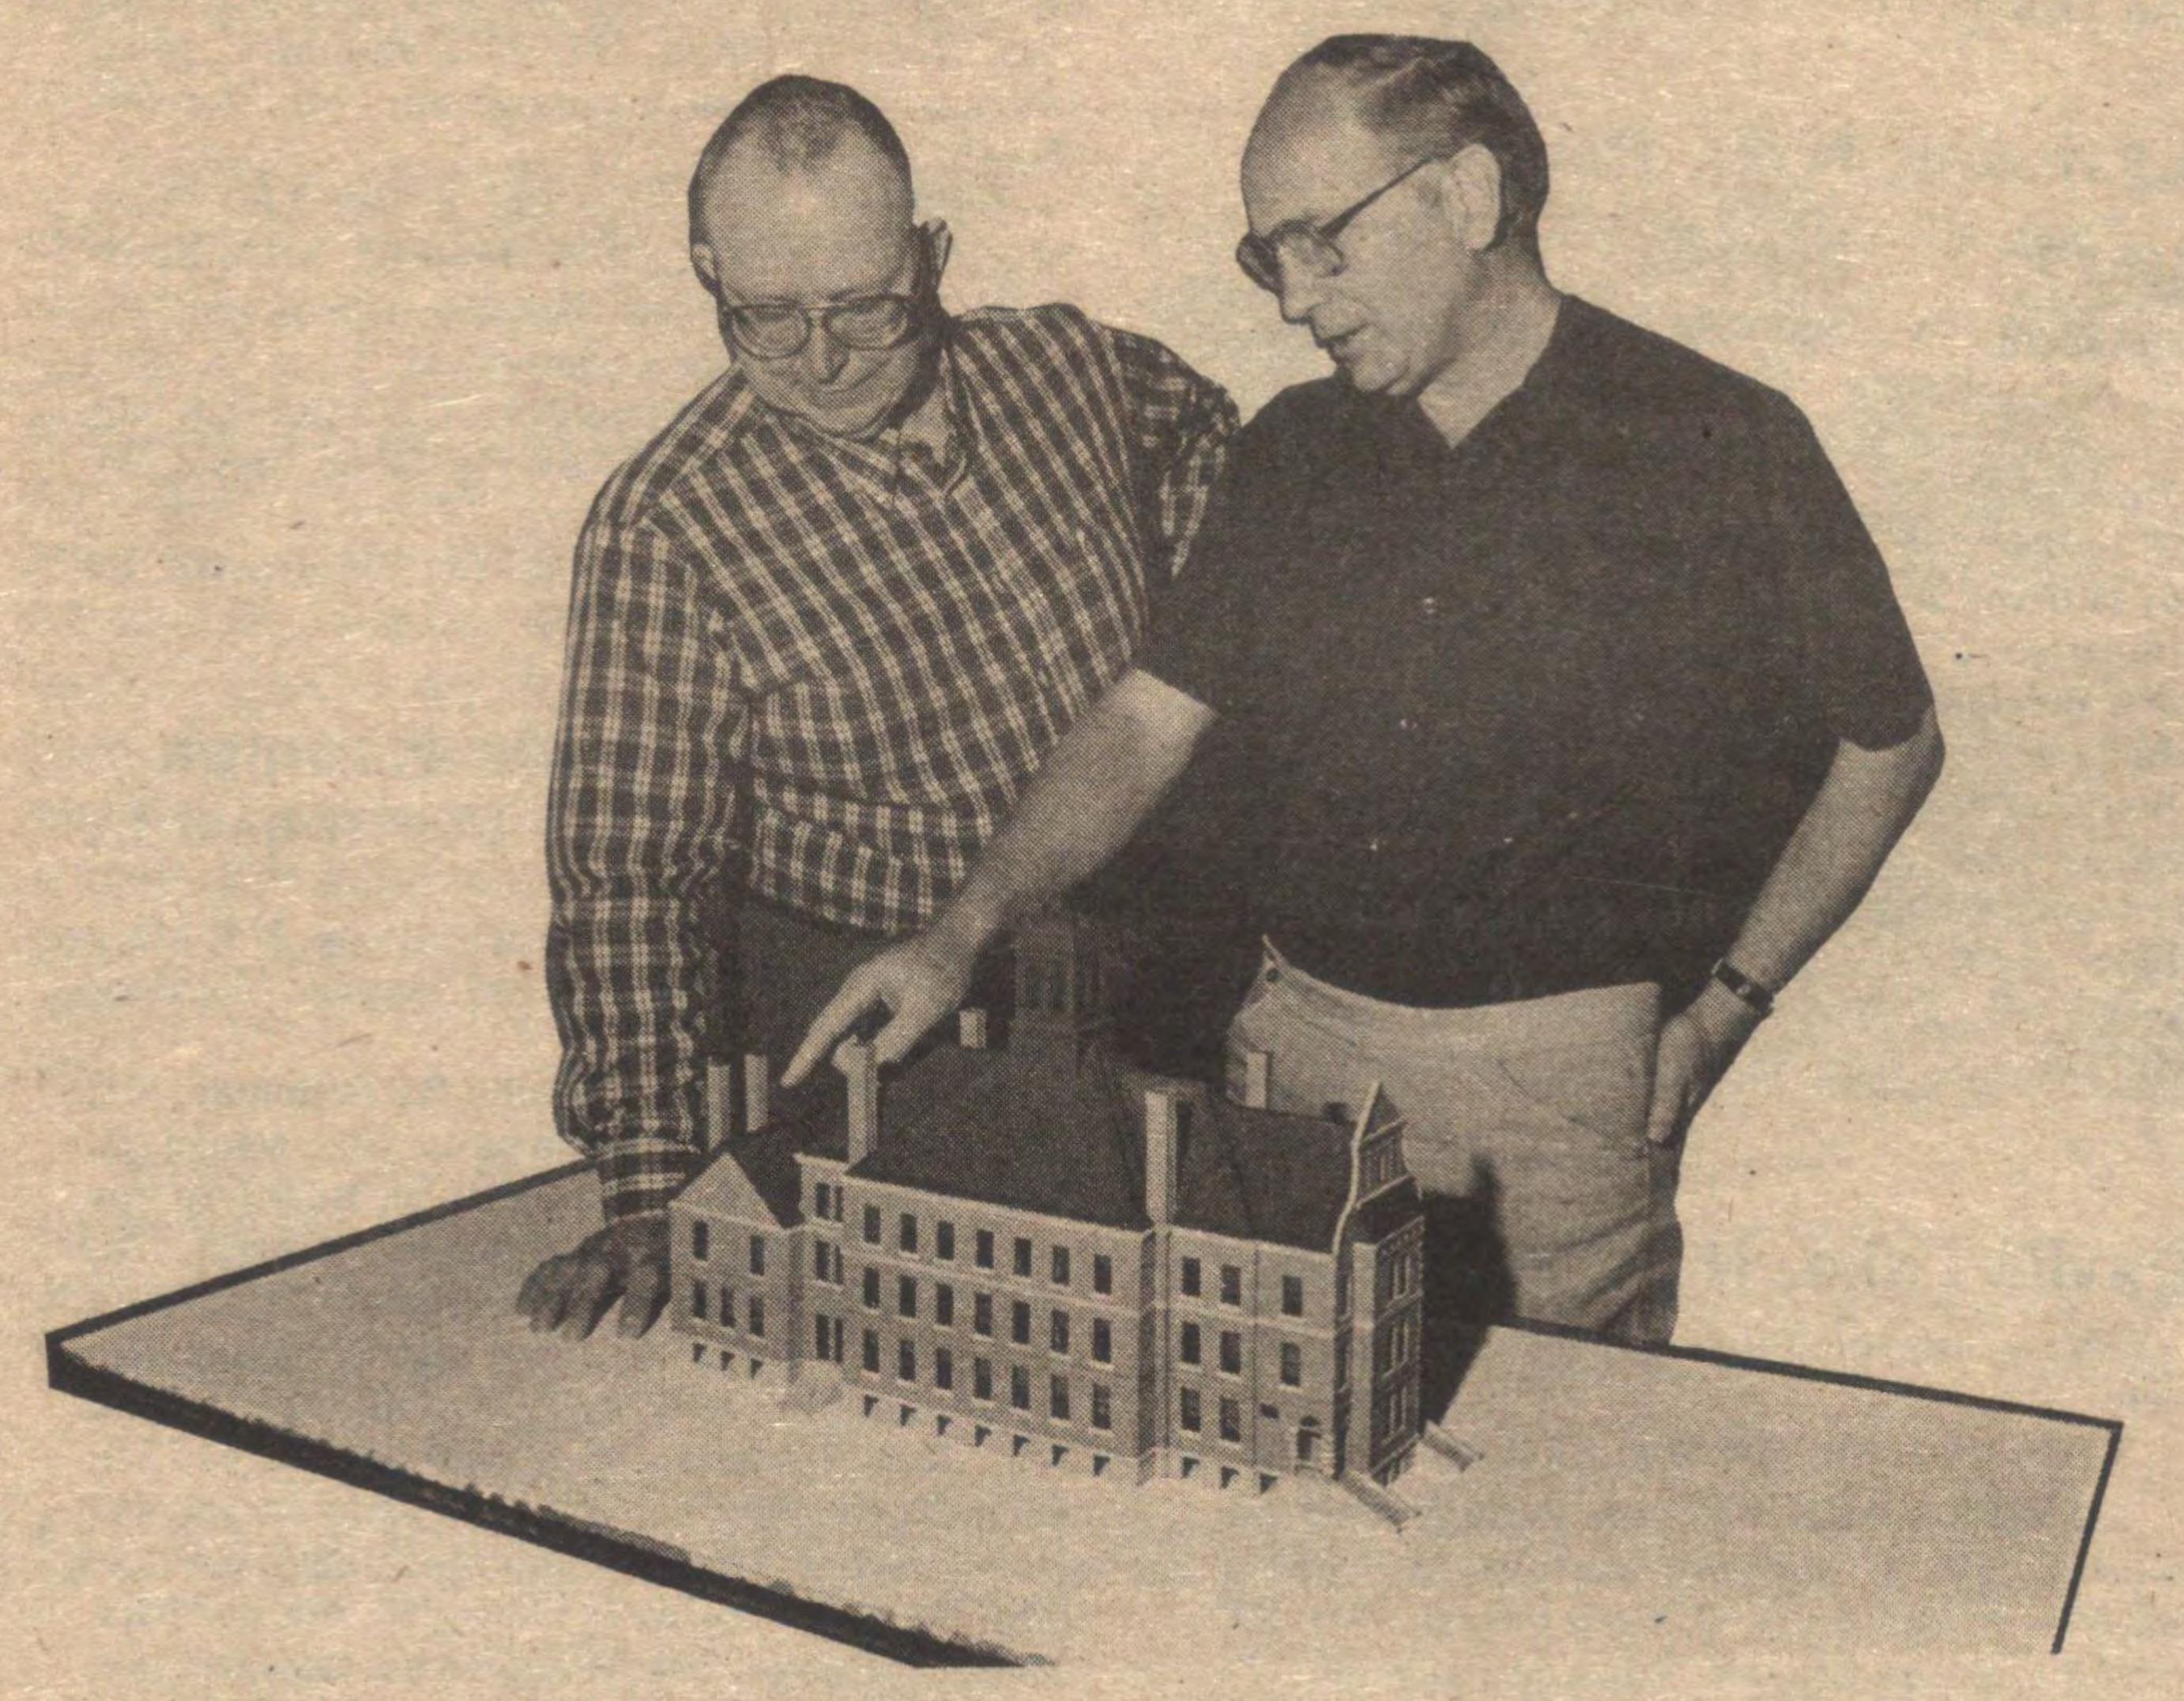

The refurbished Old Main will be located in the middle of the decidedly small town of Thurmond. And just where is Thurmond located?

"In the basement of the Warden home," the law dean grins.

In addition to a passing interest in the law, Warden has a passion for model trains, and of course, model buildings to line the model tracks. He's been assembling model trains and tracks for more than 20 years, and building his own small buildings all that time, too.

So, when the Alumni Association decided it needed some film footage of Old Main (which was razed in 1963) for the Centennial film, Warden was the natural candidate for the job of putting together an accurate, true-to-scale model of UND's first building. After some convincing, he accepted the assignment.

"When I first started to work on it,
I thought I could use commercially available parts for most of the model," Warden said. "I expected that it would take me only a couple of weeks to finish."

As it turned out, he said, most of the model's features had to be custom made — by him — and the project ended up taking about two and a half months. The task was challenging, Warden said, because "I had to do a little detective work to determine just how the building looked."

Only three pictures of the original building are known to exist, he said, and one of them is a photo of Old Main in the aftermath of a severe wind storm that nearly demolished the structure in 1887, just three years after it was built.

The other two show the original building, but are taken from the same side at only slightly different angles.

An old blueprint of the building gave Warden the necessary floor dimensions for Old Main, but he had to estimate its height by comparing it to workmen standing on the building steps in a later photo.

The completed model is about two feet long by a foot wide, and stands about a foot and a half high. Warden said it is built exactly to scale: one-eighth inch on the model equals one foot on the building.

The building after which Warden's model is patterned stood for only three years. After the 1887 storm, it was rebuilt in substantially different form, and about half a century later its entire third floor was removed for safety reasons. But although very few alumni today would remember the building as it appears in the film, Warden is confident that "people will recognize it as Old Main."

Commercial firms are available to construct building models, but Warden noted that such work is very expensive—he estimates that Old Main would have cost anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000 to build in model form. Besides, he points out, the true connoisseur has artistic pride to consider as well:

"I would never dream of having someone else build one for me."

The much-debated Columbia Road Overpass apparently will be built by the city of Grand Forks, following approval of the project in a city-wide referendum early last month.

The scaled-down, two-lane version of the overpass will connect North and South Columbia Road, spanning the Burlington Northern Railroad tracks and running between Memorial Stadium and Hyslop Sports Center on the University of North Dakota campus. UND has asked the city for some compensation in connection with the project, including additional parking space, pedestrian walkways and money to place artificial turf in Memorial Stadium to make up for the loss of a football practice field.

Cat books and cube books were popular reading at the University of North Dakota this past year, just as they were on campuses nationwide.

Two anthologies of the comic-strip adventures of Garfield the cat, as well as Simon Bond's "101 Uses for a Dead Cat," were on the Top Ten reading list for campuses around the country this year, as were two books revealing how to solve Rubik's Cube. Book sales at the UND Bookstore and other Grand Forks area outlets generally parallel national trends, managers say.

Some observers of the national college scene have lamented what they call a relaxing scholarly standard in students' outside reading, pointing out that a decade ago campus Top Ten lists included works such as "Future Shock" by Alvin Toffler, "The Greening of America" by Charles Reich and "Beyond Freedom and Dignity" by B.F. Skinner.

But David Marshall, UND associate professor of English, says students' reading habits here are "a mixed bag." His informal assessment of preferences showed that, as always, taste differs among students.

"Some of them are reading good literature," he said. "And some are reading Harlequin romances."

U.S. Rep. Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan came up with a University of North Dakota connection when he delivered the keynote speech at the North Dakota state Republican Convention in Minot in early March.

Vander Jagt recalled that his speech teacher at Hope College in Holland, Mich., earned bachelor's and doctoral degrees from UND.

"If you like my speech," he said, "give credit to the University of North Dakota. If you don't like my speech, blame me."

Commencement for over 2,000 caps academic year at UND

The University of North Dakota had a bumper crop this year—some 2,000 candidates were eligible to receive degrees at spring commencement ceremonies.

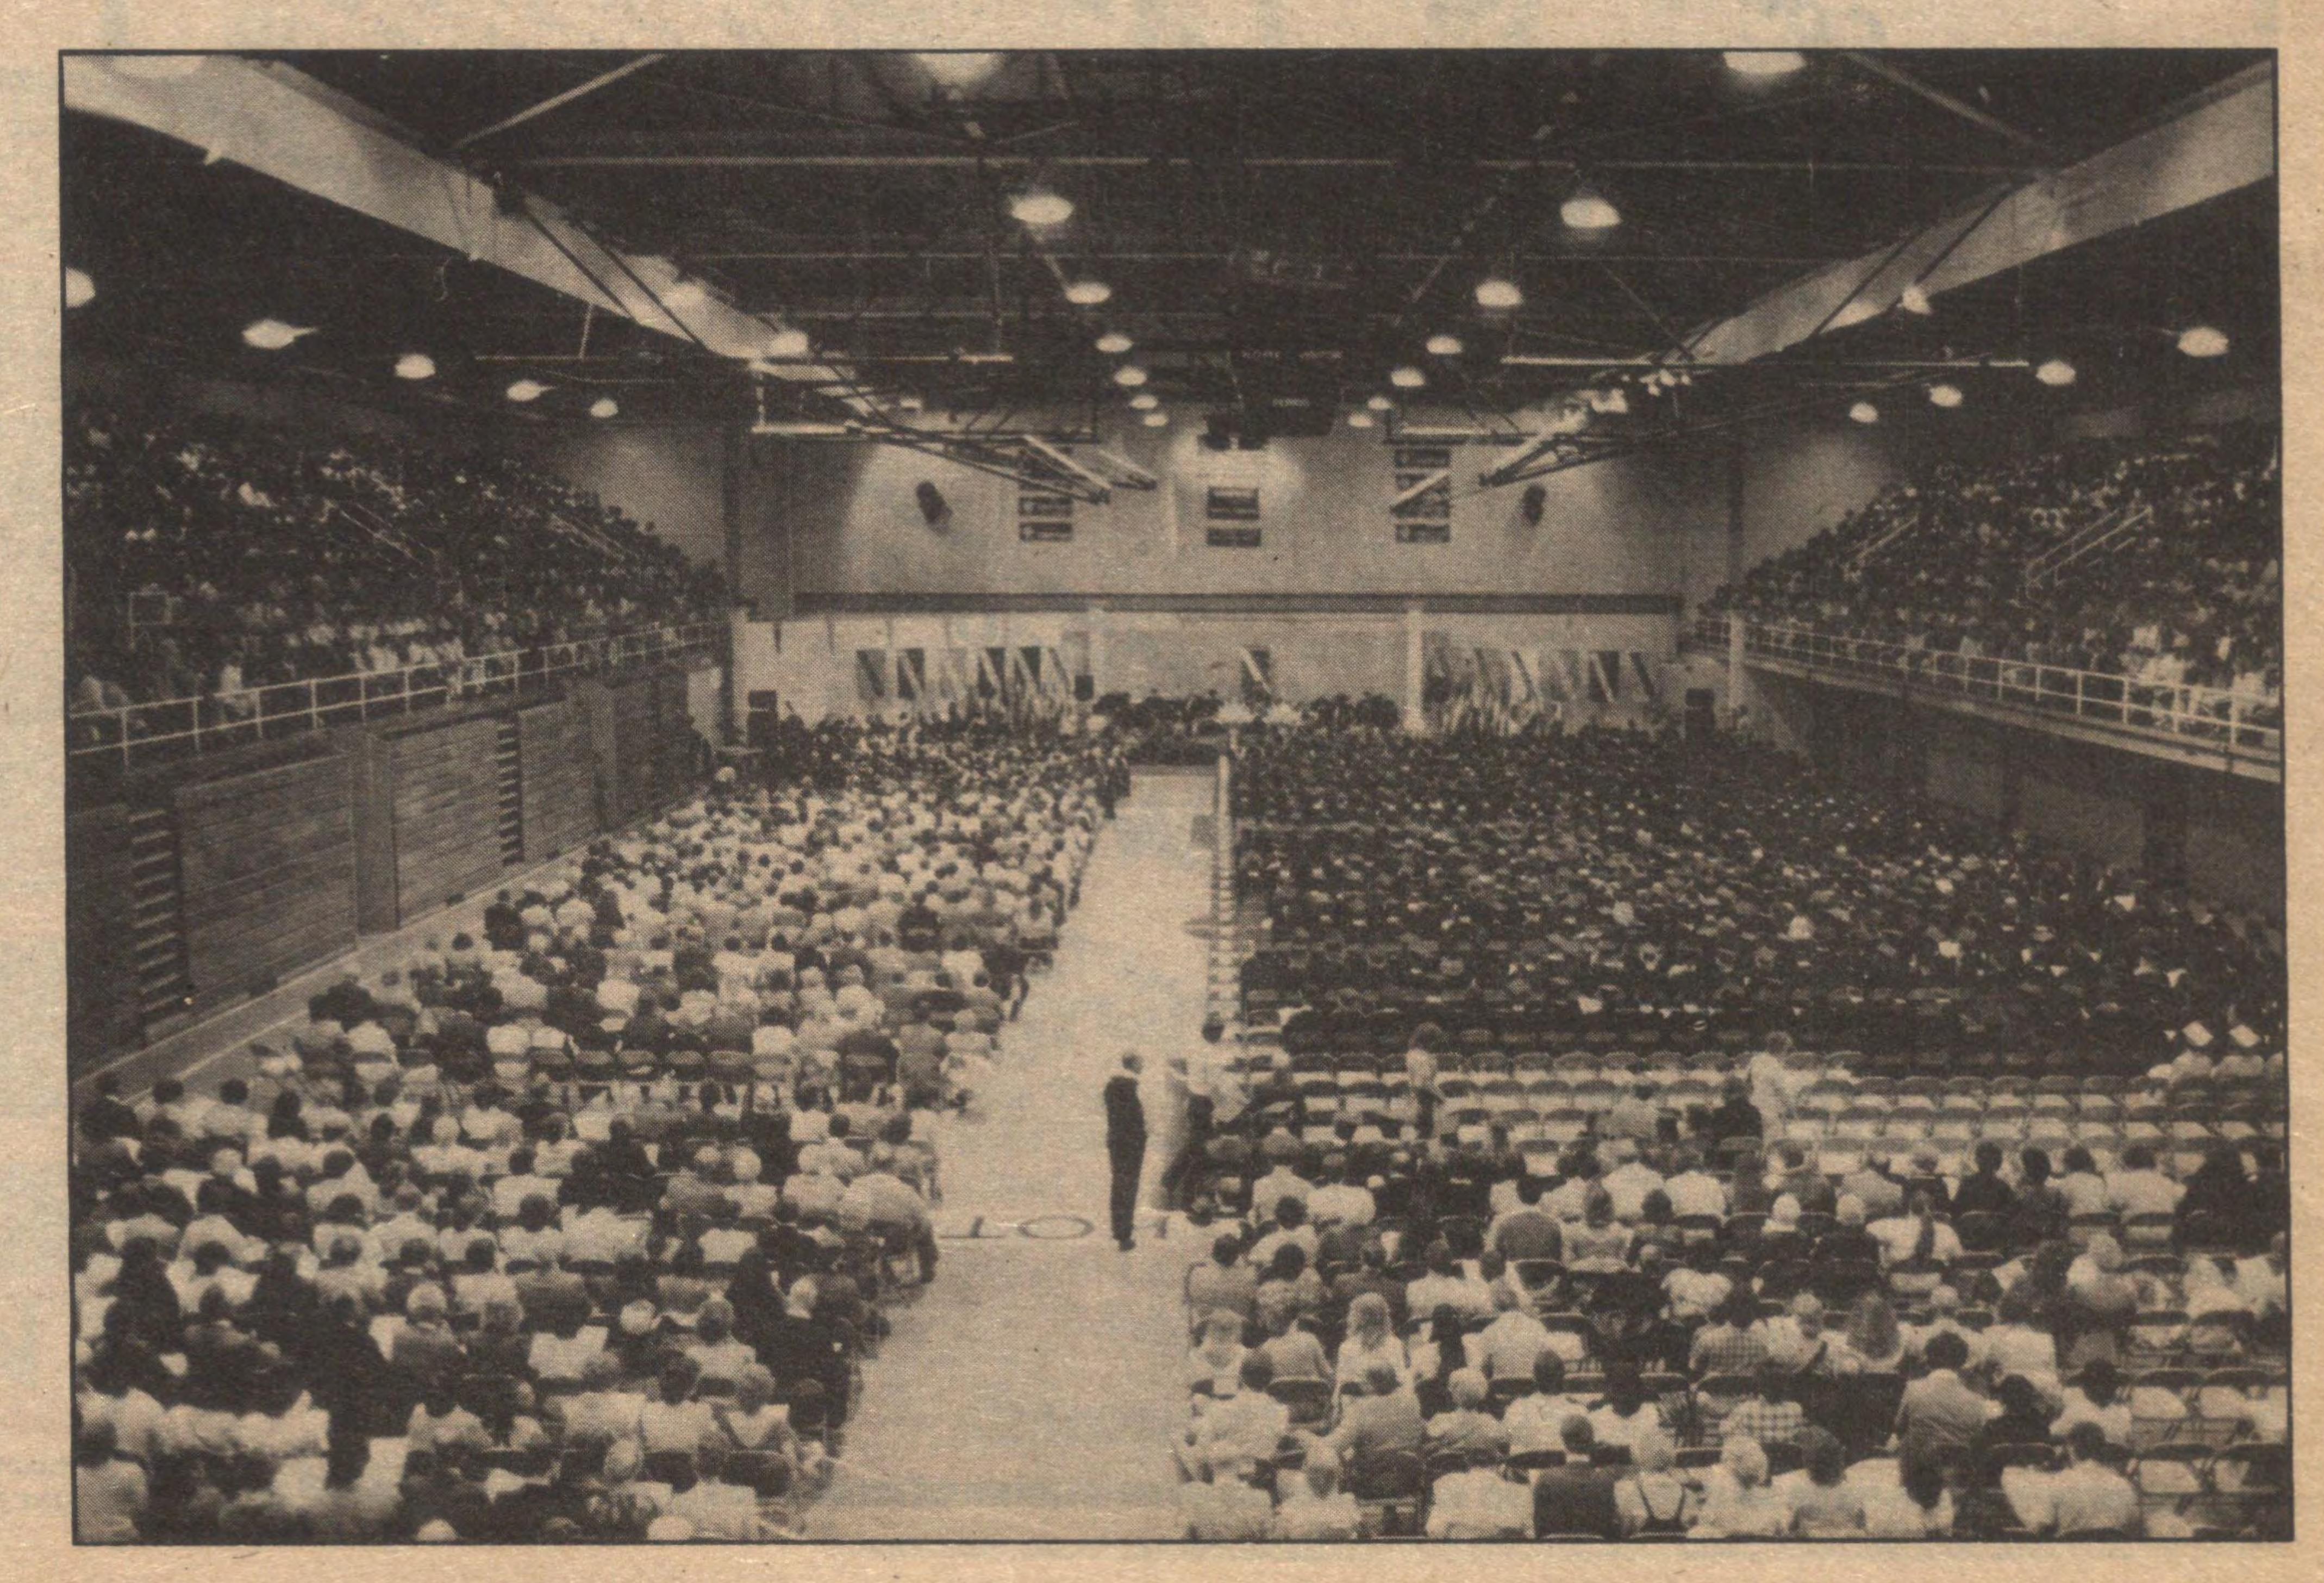

Scholars, mentors, proud parents and friends, as well as hundreds of cap-and-gowned graduates, crowded the Hyslop Sports Center May 16 for the annual rite of passage.

They heard North Dakota native Warren Christopher explain that adversity strengthens; and Christopher should know, for the former U.S. deputy secretary of state faced a lot of it in helping free 52 American hostages from Iran a little more than a year ago.

They saw Christopher and Anne Carlsen (former administrator of the Jamestown, N.D., school for handicapped children that bears her name) receive honorary doctoral degrees from UND.

And they watched, perhaps a bit more attentively, as each new UND graduate stepped across the stage to receive a diploma and a handshake from University President Thomas J. Clifford.

U alum uses microsurgical blood bypass operation to help reduce risk of strokes

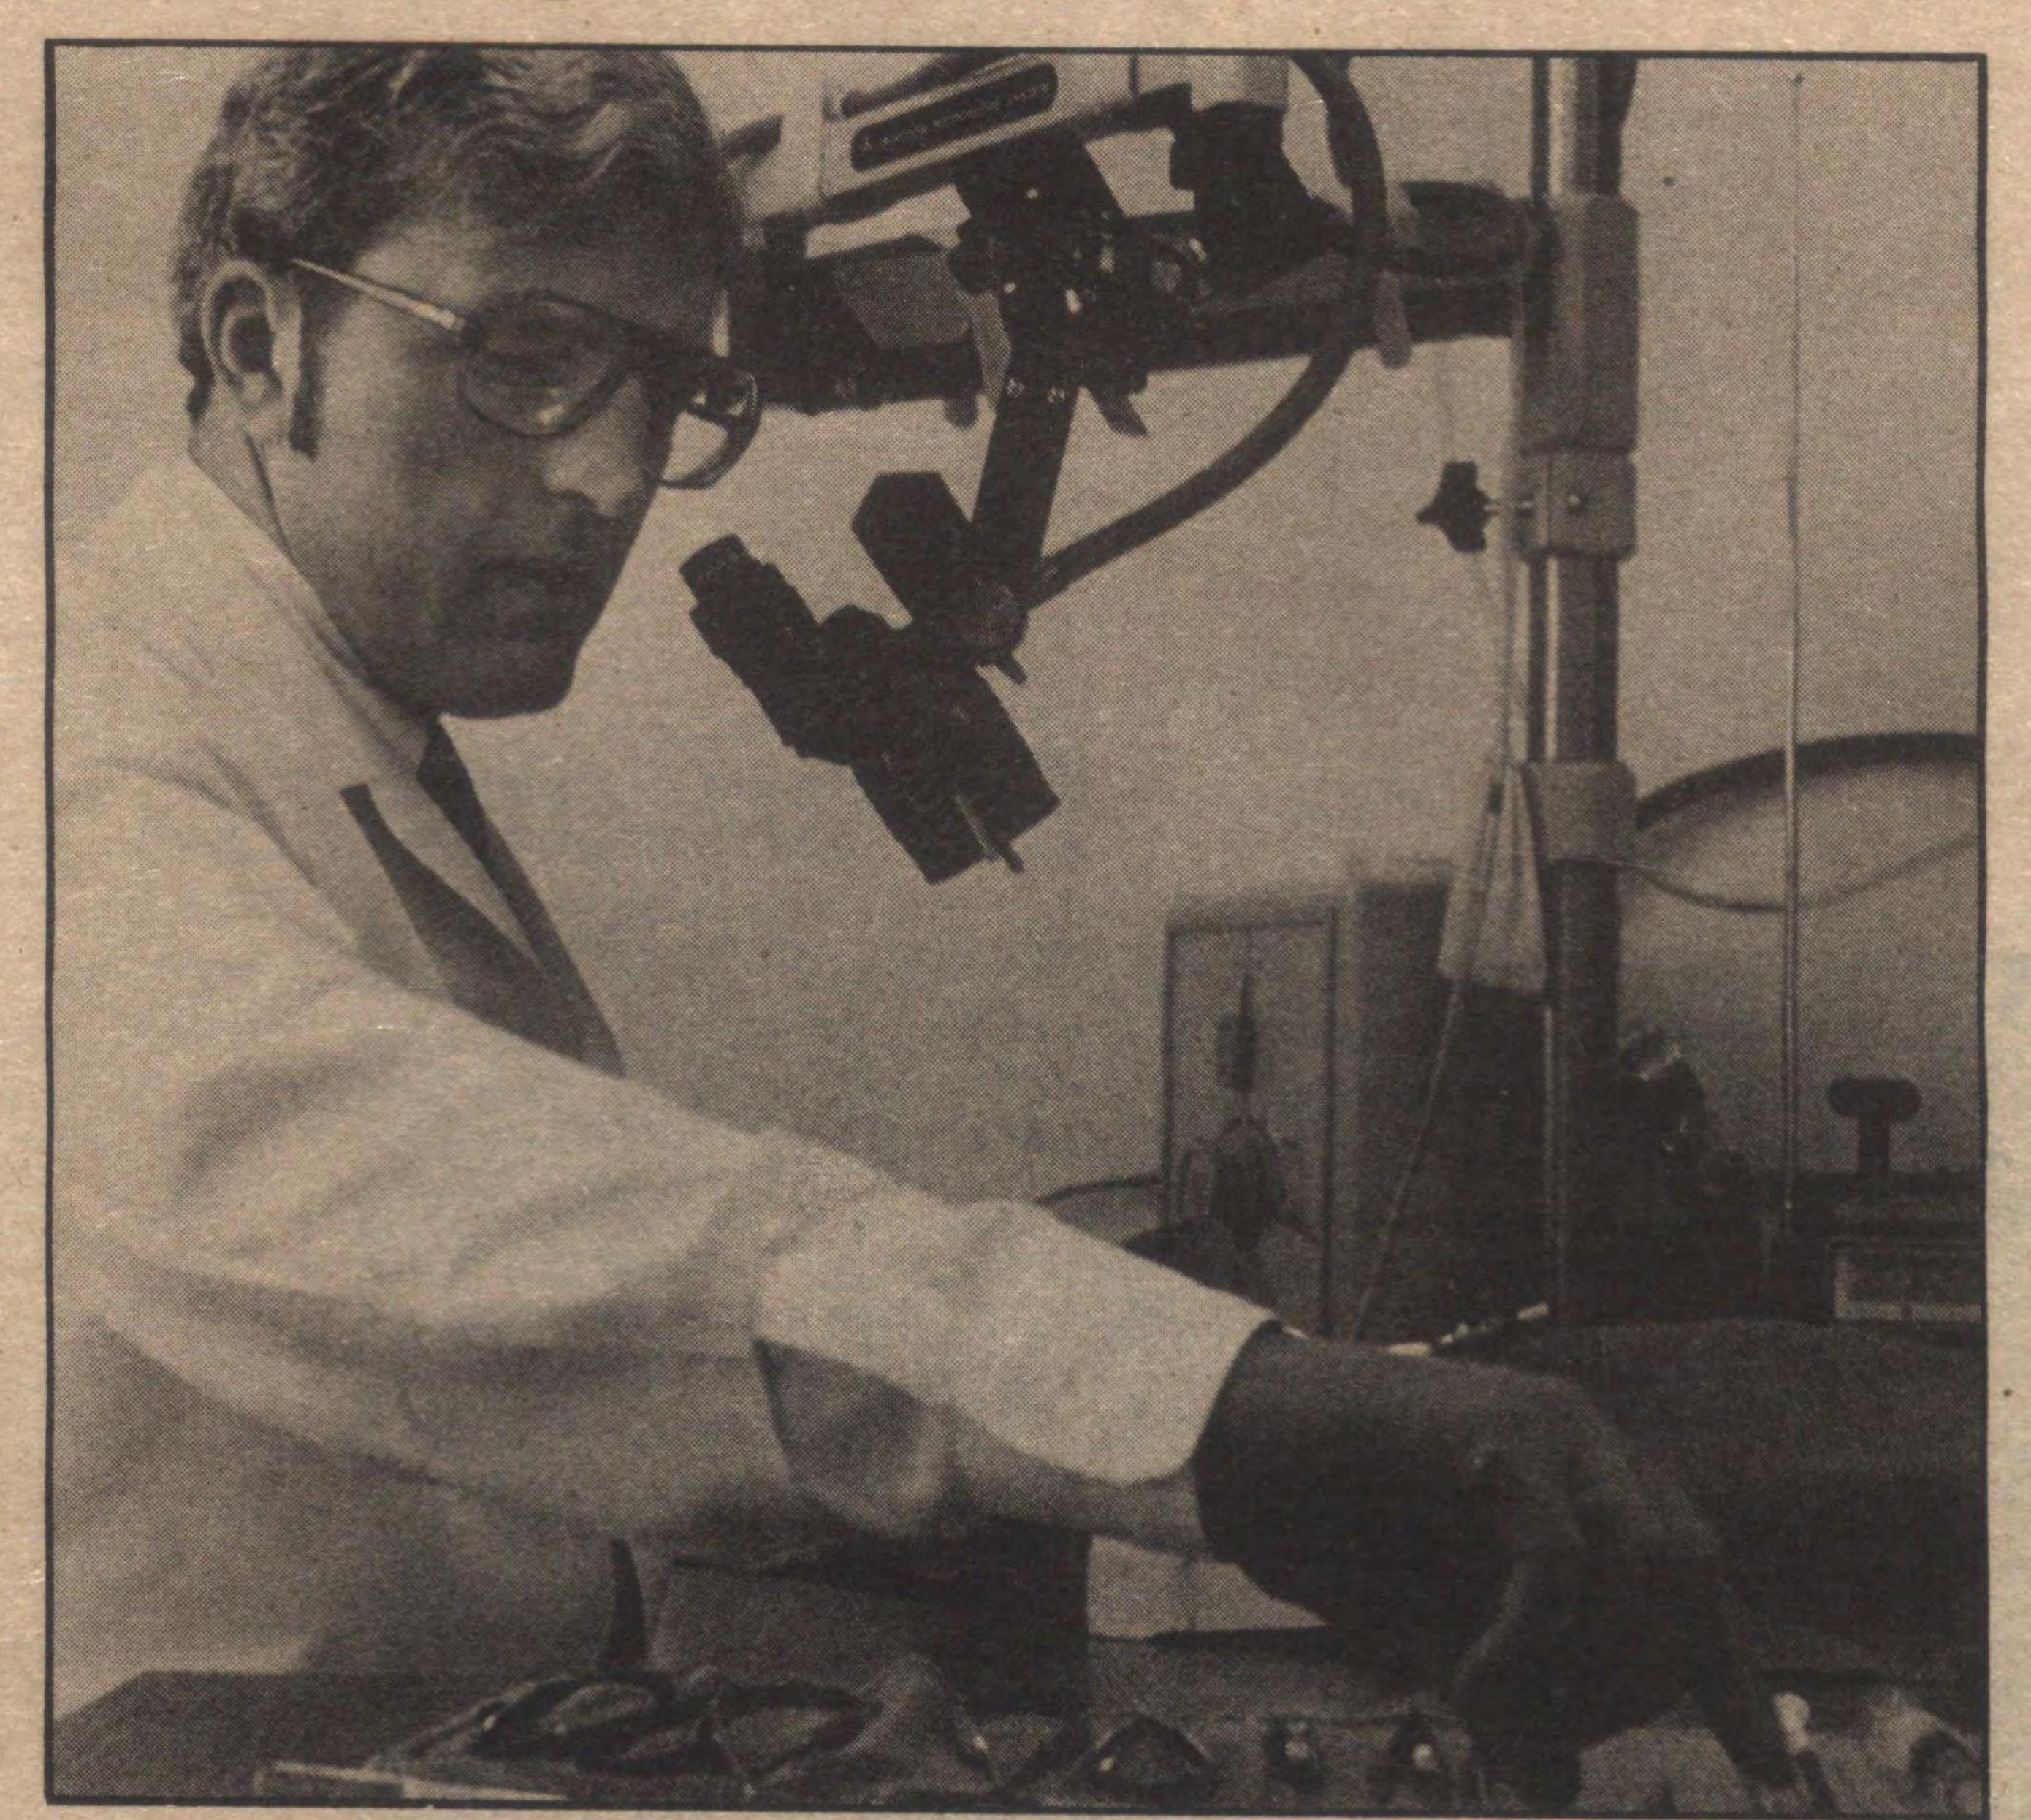

Many people around Kansas City, Mo., have reduced their once high risk of having strokes thanks to an advanced surgical technique brought to that area by a University of North Dakota alumnus.

Dr. E. Jerome Hanson Jr., '65, '67, a native of Grand Forks, perfected his use of the relatively new technique while completing his residency at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. He earned bachelor's and medical science degrees at UND and transferred to the University of Pennsylvania to finish his studies. He went to Kansas City in 1975 to join the staff at the 700-bed St. Luke's Hospital there, and became the first doctor in that area to perform the innovative cerebrovascular detour that diverts blood from the surface of the scalp onto the surface of the brain.

"This procedure is useful in selected cases in helping minimize the risk of stroke," Hanson explained.

Since one of the leading causes of stroke is an obstruction of the blood supply to some part of the brain, Hanson said, one way of reducing the risk of stroke from such a cause is to resupply the affected area of the brain with blood from another source.

If Hanson can detect the blockage in time, he can arrange a surgical detour, rerouting an artery that supplies blood to the scalp into the skull to the affected

Dr. E. Jerome Hanson Jr., '65, '67, keeps his skills sharp by working in the St. Luke's Hospital experimental microsurgery laboratory.

Some experts believe the bypass significantly reduces the risk of stroke — one of the major causes of death and disability in the nation.

Patients experiencing symptoms of an imminent stroke, such as periodic trances or blackouts or loss of feeling or control in arms or legs, are often referred by family doctors to Hanson in Kansas City.

If Hanson discovers a blockage in an artery leading to the surface of the brain, he prepares for the six-to seven-hour operation that will bypass that obstruction.

The microvascular surgery is performed with the aid of a surgical microscope, and requires considerable expertise in the field of microsurgery. Hanson received training in this delicate work at Mayo, where he spent a year of his residency doing cerebrovascular research before beginning his practice in Kansas City.

"I was the one who introduced it in the Kansas City area," he said. "There are probably one or two others using it here now."

As a result of his rare skill in microscopic brain surgery, Hanson was involved in establishing the Regional Neuroscience Center of St. Luke's Hospital, which has since become a primary referral center for persons in the area who need such care.

The cerebrovascular bypass operation that Hanson uses was developed in the late 1960s by surgeons in Switzerland and Vermont. Although the technique is still in the investigational stage, Hanson and other neurovascular experts believe that it could play a major role in preventing some of the 600,000 strokes that occur in the United States each year.

At any rate, Hanson has seen the procedure work some near miracles. He recalls the first time he saw the operation used at Mayo. A patient there had suffered some severe early symptoms of an oncoming stroke; within four months after the operation, the man was able to walk and go home.

"The last time I saw him," Hanson recalled, "he was playing with his grandkids."

summer's Binford, N.D., reunion to our Las Vegas UND weekend (see picture on this page). North Dakotans have a great feeling about their hometowns. Our people also have a wholesome sense of humor; the motto on the shirt reads "I know when I die I'm going to heaven 'cuz I've already been to BINFORD, NORTH DAKOTA."

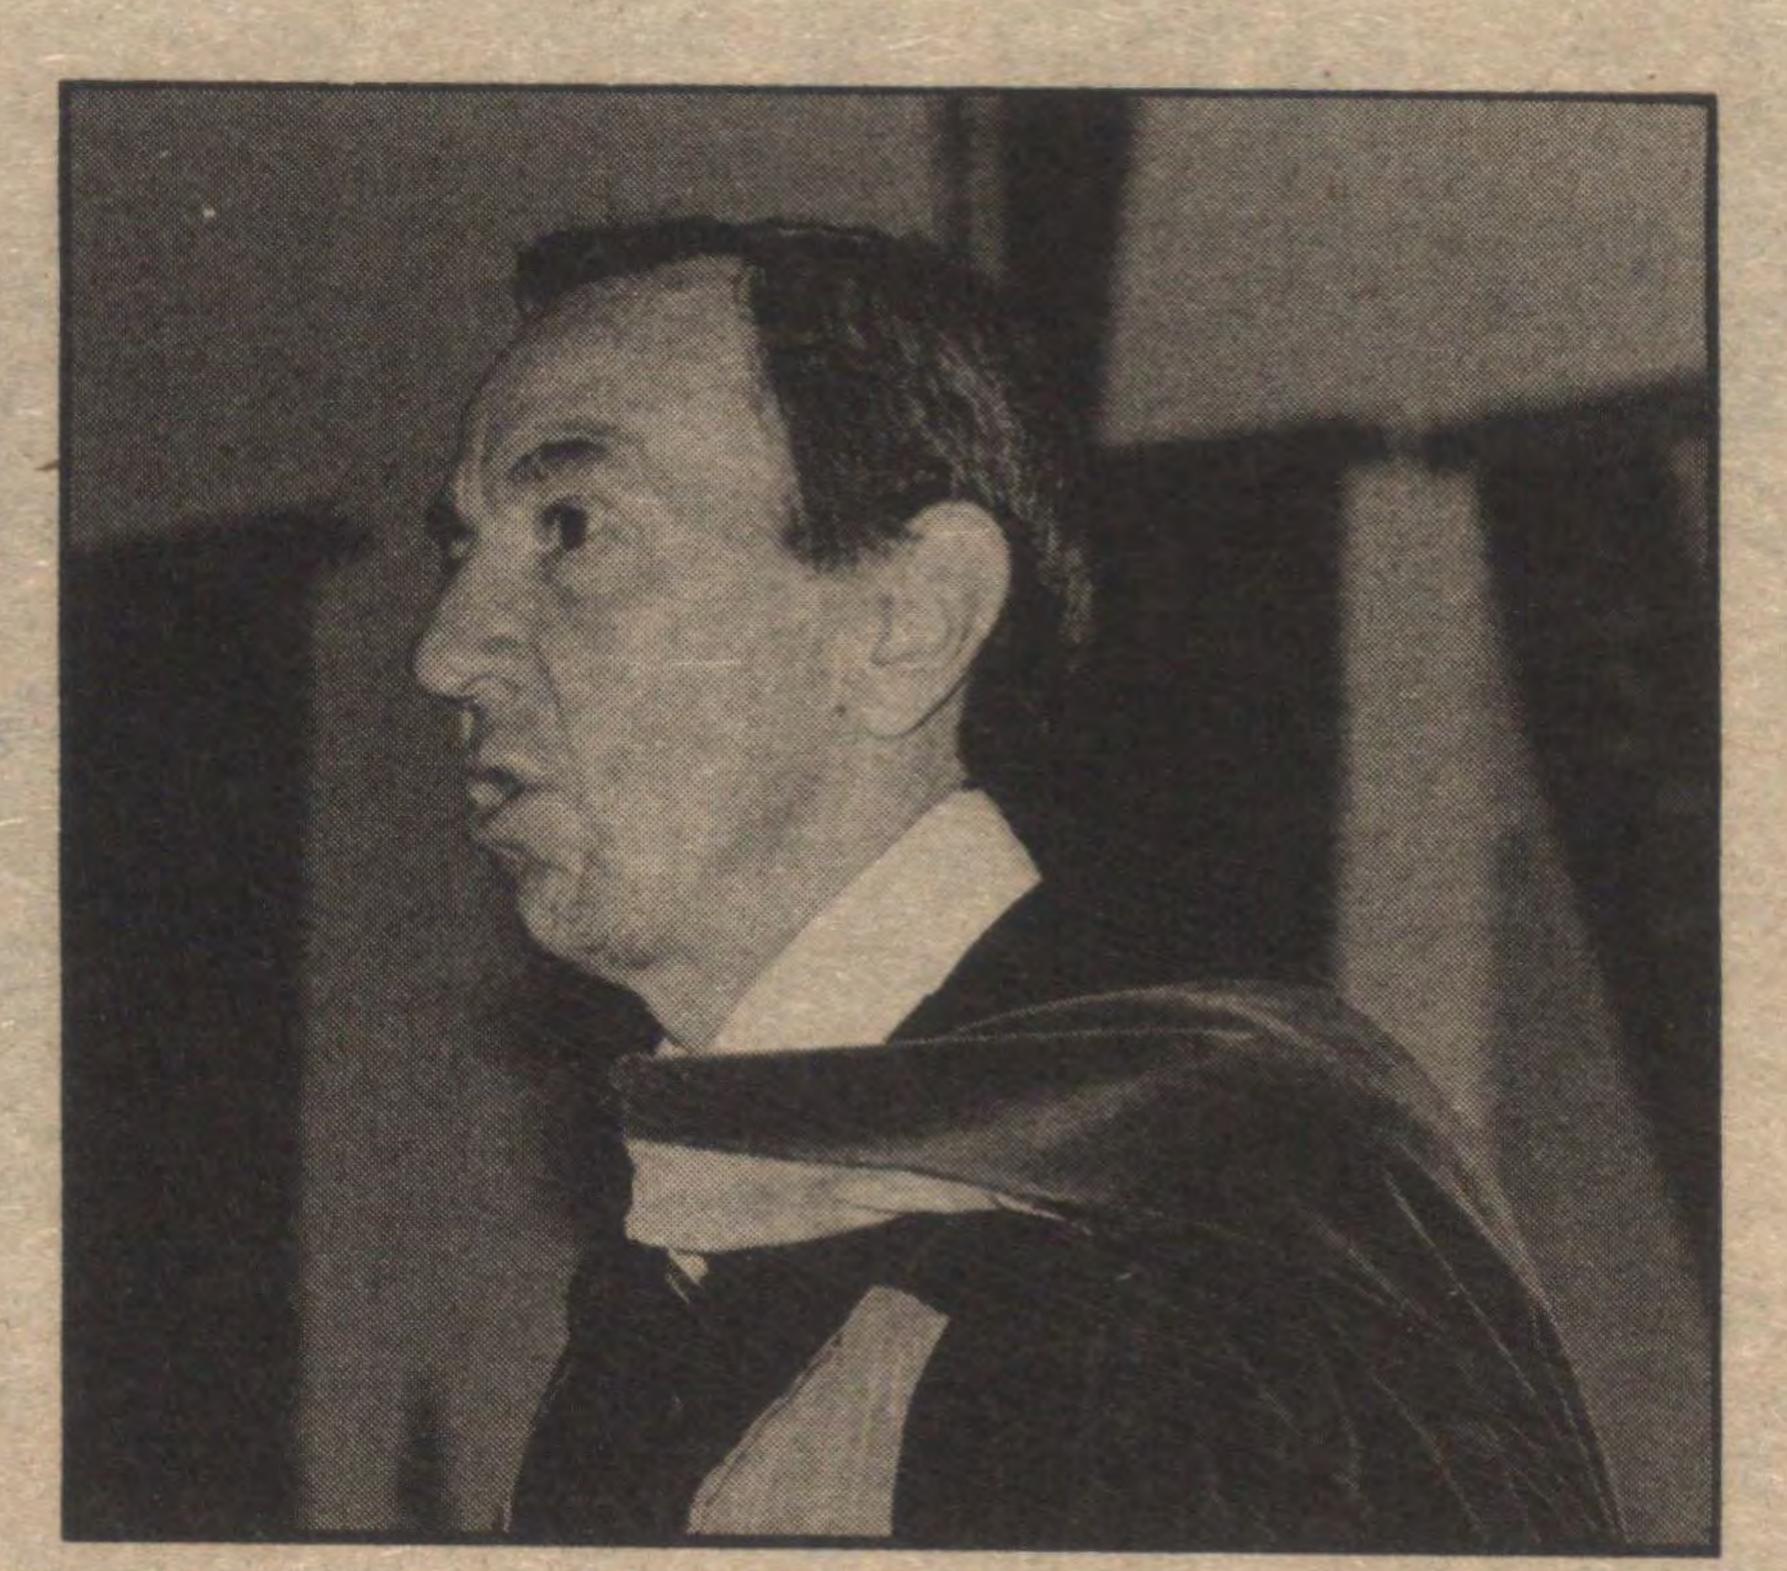

If you're planning to make it back for one of these hometown reunions, or if any of your travels bring you anywhere close to campus, please stop in the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center for a cup of coffee and a visit.

Have a good summer, and to all of our loyal alumni a most sincere "thank you" for making the 1981-82 alumni year so successful.

Merriment, memories are Alumni Days fare

Reunions

The Law School Class of '32 had a special guest for a special reunion: Professor Jerome Hall, who taught criminal law at UND in the early '30s, was back from California. At the reunion were, from left, Victor Stiehm, Joe Stevens, Vernon M. Johnson, Cora Rex, Reuben Blodeau, Professor Hall, John Thorson and Dewey Balch.

Stories and memories flowed like the English Coulee around the University of North Dakota as classmates from years ago gathered again on campus during 1982 Alumni Days in May.

Many returning alumni straggled in late—a baggage-handlers' strike at one airline that serves Grand Forks had forced some air travelers to scramble for seats on other lines—but few missed the "traveling microphone" that broadcast so many reminiscenes at the traditional steak fry on the first evening of Alumni Days.

Other events marked the three-day affair as well: the site of a proposed new art gallery was formally dedicated, guided tours provided a look at an ever-growing campus and a fashion show recalled styles of dress of the 1930s and '40s—especially nostalgic for classes celebrating special 50- and 40-year anniversary reunions. The photos on these pages capture some of those events.

But best of all, there were memories to share and friendships to renew at that sure sign of spring: Alumni Days.

Activities

Laura C. Christianson, '32, returned to campus both for her 50-year class reunion and to help dedicate the site for a proposed new art gallery—which is being designed with the help of her gift of $250,000.

Friendships were renewed and new ones were made during the first Alumni Days mixer ever held in the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center. Alumni and guests gathered in turn-of-the-century surroundings in the restored home of early UND presidents.

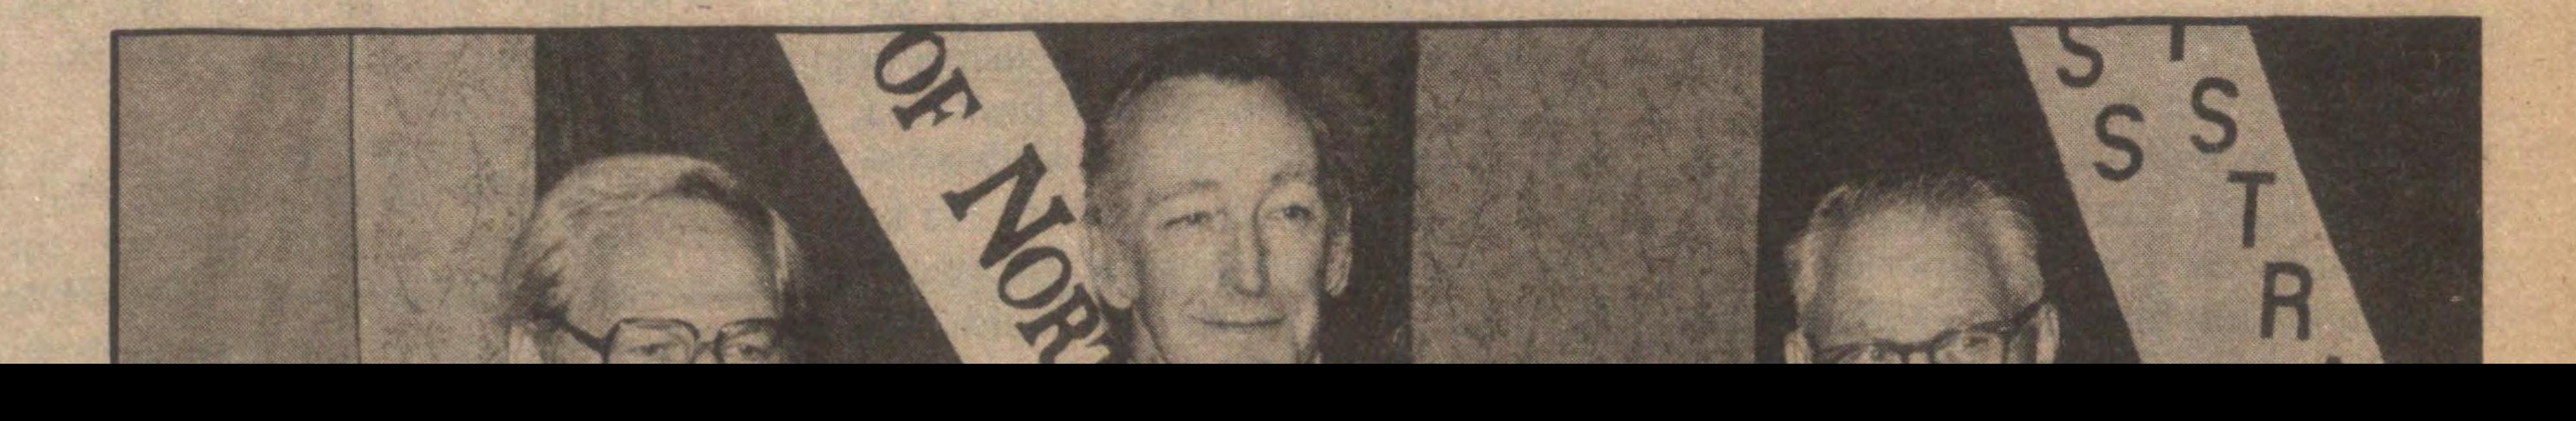

Awards

UND President Thomas J. Clifford, '42, '48, and his wife Florence (Schmidt), '42, both received Sioux Awards and a chance to visit with classmates during the special 40th anniversary reunion of their graduating class.

Andrew L. Freeman, '32, left, received the Sioux Award from UND Alumni Association President Merlin Dewing, '56, '58, at the awards banquet during Alumni Days. Freeman also joined a record turnout of 50-year anniversary reunion participants from the UND Class of '32.

Alums Roney, Grangaard hold leadership positions in banking world

Tom Roney, '47, Carrington

By DAVE VORLAND

Tom Roney of Carrington, N.D., '47, is a lawyer turned bank president who has been highly successful in his professional life and who, quite frankly, enjoys the fruit of his labors.

Like many University of North Dakota alumni of his era, Roney attributes many of his accomplishments and much of his "joy of life" to his years at the University during the Great Depression. In those days, poverty-stricken students had to struggle to stay in school, putting off the good times until the future.

But there was another early experience, too, that was pivotal in Tom Roney's life and helps to explain his eager, good-humored approach to life. He spent many long, cold, hungry and dangerous months as a prisoner of war during World War II, an episode which motivated him in later years to live every moment as if it might be his last.

On the professional side, Roney has been a classic seven-day-a-week overachiever, first as a lawyer and state's attorney in his adopted hometown of Carrington and then, for more than 20 years, as the president of the Foster County Bank and Trust Co. He steps down this spring as president of the North Dakota Bankers Association.

On the personal side, Roney delights in good company and conversation, loves fine food and champagne, and doesn't hesitate to spend money to enjoy his estate-like Carrington home or to enjoy the freedom of foreign travel with wife Peg (Blumer), '42.

The luxuries of rebuilding a turn-ofthe-century farmhouse and of cultivating beautiful flowers in his backyard must have seemed very unlikely to then Lt. Tom Roney in the winter of 1945, as he and his fellow POWs were forcemarched by their German captors from Poland to Bavaria, just ahead of advancing Russian armies.

On the other hand, fantasies about food and long talks about the future with his buddies helped keep him going, Roney recalls today. That and a businesslike, disciplined approach to day-to-day survival, got him through a nightmare that left many of his fellow prisoners dead.

Roney's unit had been captured in France in December 1944 after being cut off in a night action. After they surrendered in the face of superior odds, the man next to him, Roney remembers, was shot in retaliation for a German soldier's death in the just-ended firefight.

Roney and other captured GIs were shipped in a sealed boxcar to Poland. Fortunately, he said, the guards there were old Prussian officers no longer fit for action. They treated their prisoners honorably, he said, and suffered much the same deprivation during the long forced marches. As a result, he bears no animosity today toward Germany, and, in fact, has returned several times.

Like many former POWs, Roney must be coaxed into discussing his wartime service. Many have had bitter experiences, such as the friend of Roney's who wrote to a woman who had put her address in a Red Cross care package.

The woman wrote back, saying she had knitted socks for "a hero soldier, not a coward prisoner."

Roney's own letters did not arrive until after he had returned home. Fortunately, wife Peg and other loved ones had been informed of his survival by the parents of a fellow POW whose mail did get through.

Roney, who grew up in Oakes, and Peg, born in Ellendale, met at the University. He began in 1938, and had finished his first year of law school before war intervened. Peg joined the Women's Army Corps in 1942. The couple was married just before Roney went on active duty with his ROTC commission in January 1943.

Life at UND was much different when the couple returned in 1946. Gone was the feeling of "shared poverty" which had been the rule in the 1930s and which carried no stigma. After the war, many of the younger students had money, booze and cars, and were rather despised by the older veterans, Roney recalls.

Entire families were there, Peg observes. Their particular group consisted of married veterans in their midand late 20s, often with children. Also present were younger brothers who had been in the service, as well as "baby" brothers and sisters of more traditional college age.

Roney says that as a returning student, he found he shared the goaloriented attitude of most veterans. Most were dead serious about their studies, eager to finish up and go to work.

In his first stint at UND, Roney had lived in the ATO house. After the war, he lived in an apartment adjacent to then newly appointed alumni director J. Lloyd Stone. Today he looks back with nostalgia to the "campus cave," to studying law with now UND President Tom Clifford and his job in the law library.

His first offer of employment was with a law firm in Duluth, but he opted instead to buy out the law practice of a Carrington lawyer who had somehow found himself in jail.

That was 1947. Roney was elected states attorney the following year, a post he held until 1959. The local bank offered him a job in 1948, which he turned down in favor of continuing his private practice. This he did with excellent results, with one interruption when he was called back into the service during the Korean conflict.

More than a decade after the first offer, the local banker pitched Roney again on a job — this time as president of the institution. Roney hesitated, he said, because he was making a good living as a lawyer at the time. He knew, however, that because of the long hours he was missing seeing his children grow up. The idea of banker's hours and such fringe benefits as four weeks of vacation a year was intriguing. He decided to make the temporary financial sacrifice and accept the position.

That was 1959. Typically, Roney did not take a vacation until 1962. But he found the work fascinating. Through his leadership, the bank has grown from $5 million in assets to $50 million, has constructed a new building and remodeled it twice and has consistently been ranked Number One of the 29 banks in the Bremer Bank System.

Roney attributes the prosperity of the Foster County Bank and Trust Co. first of all to the Bremer organization philosophy, which stresses local autonomy.

Tom Roney, '47, outside the bank in Carrington that he has served as president for more than 20 years.

But most of all, he says, the bank's success is related to the surrounding rich central North Dakota farming country. Even in the Depression, there were good crops in Foster County. And, he adds, the old-fashioned farmers in the area are sharp businessmen who don't borrow much and who like to deposit their money in a place where their assets will be protected.

Not that small-town banking is easy. Locally, for instance, Foster County Bank and Trust Co. competes with a savings and loan association, a production credit association, a credit union and another bank.

The general economic situation also is not optimal, Roney concedes. Despite the best crop in history this past year, the net worth of area farmers continues to erode. Interest rates are the big villain. "Don't let anyone kid you," he says, "bankers want interest rates to come down."

Not surprisingly for a banker, Roney blames government for much of the interest rate problem. There's a credibility gap involving both the Administration and the Congress, he argues, and until the public can believe what it's told about a commitment to reducing deficit spending, the problem is likely to continue.

A bit more unexpected is Roney's analysis of another problem faced by smaller banks in the country — the erosion of their deposits to other institutions which offer various "money market" plans. The effort by smaller banks to "obtain a level playing field" in order to fairly compete for deposits is not being supported with enthusiasm by the country's truly big banks, he said, perhaps because they are benefiting from the investment of the money market funds.

At any rate, Roney has enjoyed the past year as president of the state bankers association, which has given him the opportunity to discuss economic problems with some of the country's top authorities.

And, he says, it's a small world. He recently learned that a new friend, the president of the Louisiana Bankers Association, had been in the lead tank that liberated his POW camp in Germany.

What of the future?

Roney says he plans to spend less time in the bank as son-in-law Kelly Boyum takes a larger role in the business. Boyum is a UND graduate, as are both Roney daughters, Pat of Carrington and Meg of Tampa, Fla. Tom and Peg are planning to build another house on their Carrington property and look forward to more travel, including — with their grandchildren — the UND alumni trip to Norway this summer.

One thing is certain: no matter where the next years take him, Tom Roney will live each moment to its fullest.

Donald Grangaard, '39, Minneapolis

By ROBIN SELVIG

When Donald Grangaard, '39, entered the banking industry "as a matter of employment" while attending the University of North Dakota, he had no intention of making banking his lifelong career.

Grangaard is now nearing retirement as chairman of the board of the Minneapolis-based First Bank System, the nation's 16th-largest bank holding operation, and his career of more than 40 years illustrates what talent, dedication and hard work can achieve within the banking industry.

These days, Grangaard fondly recalls his years at UND, reminiscing about a business law course he took from Edward Devitt (later chief U.S. district judge for Minnesota), marching in John Howard's band and playing intramural hockey — including playing in the first game ever held in the old Winter Sports Arena, otherwise known as "the Barn." He also remembers names: Ross Eaton (head of the accounting department during Grangaard's student days), accounting professor R. D. Koppenhaver and William Bek, dean of the Liberal Arts College.

Grangaard's persuasive talents emerged during his years as an accounting major in the UND School of Commerce, when he convinced Ezra Towne, dean of the school at that time, to "let me finish my accounting major and take my elective courses in law school" during the same year. Grangaard noted that his real interest at the time was in law, but he was fearful he would be unable to afford the additional expense of law school. (Finances were a major concern to Grangaard at the time; he recalls he was a Beta Theta Pi Fraternity pledge for a year and a half, but eventually had to drop out because he was unable to pay the necessary membership fee.)

Towne eventually agreed to Grangaard's proposal, and he became perhaps the first student to be enrolled as a first-year law student while completing an accounting major.

Unfortunately, after Grangaard graduated from UND, he was still unable to afford the expense of law school. But his commitment to achieving his goals became evident in his continued pursuit of that law degree, when he moved to Minneapolis, took a position with First Bank System as a messenger between banks and enrolled in night law school.

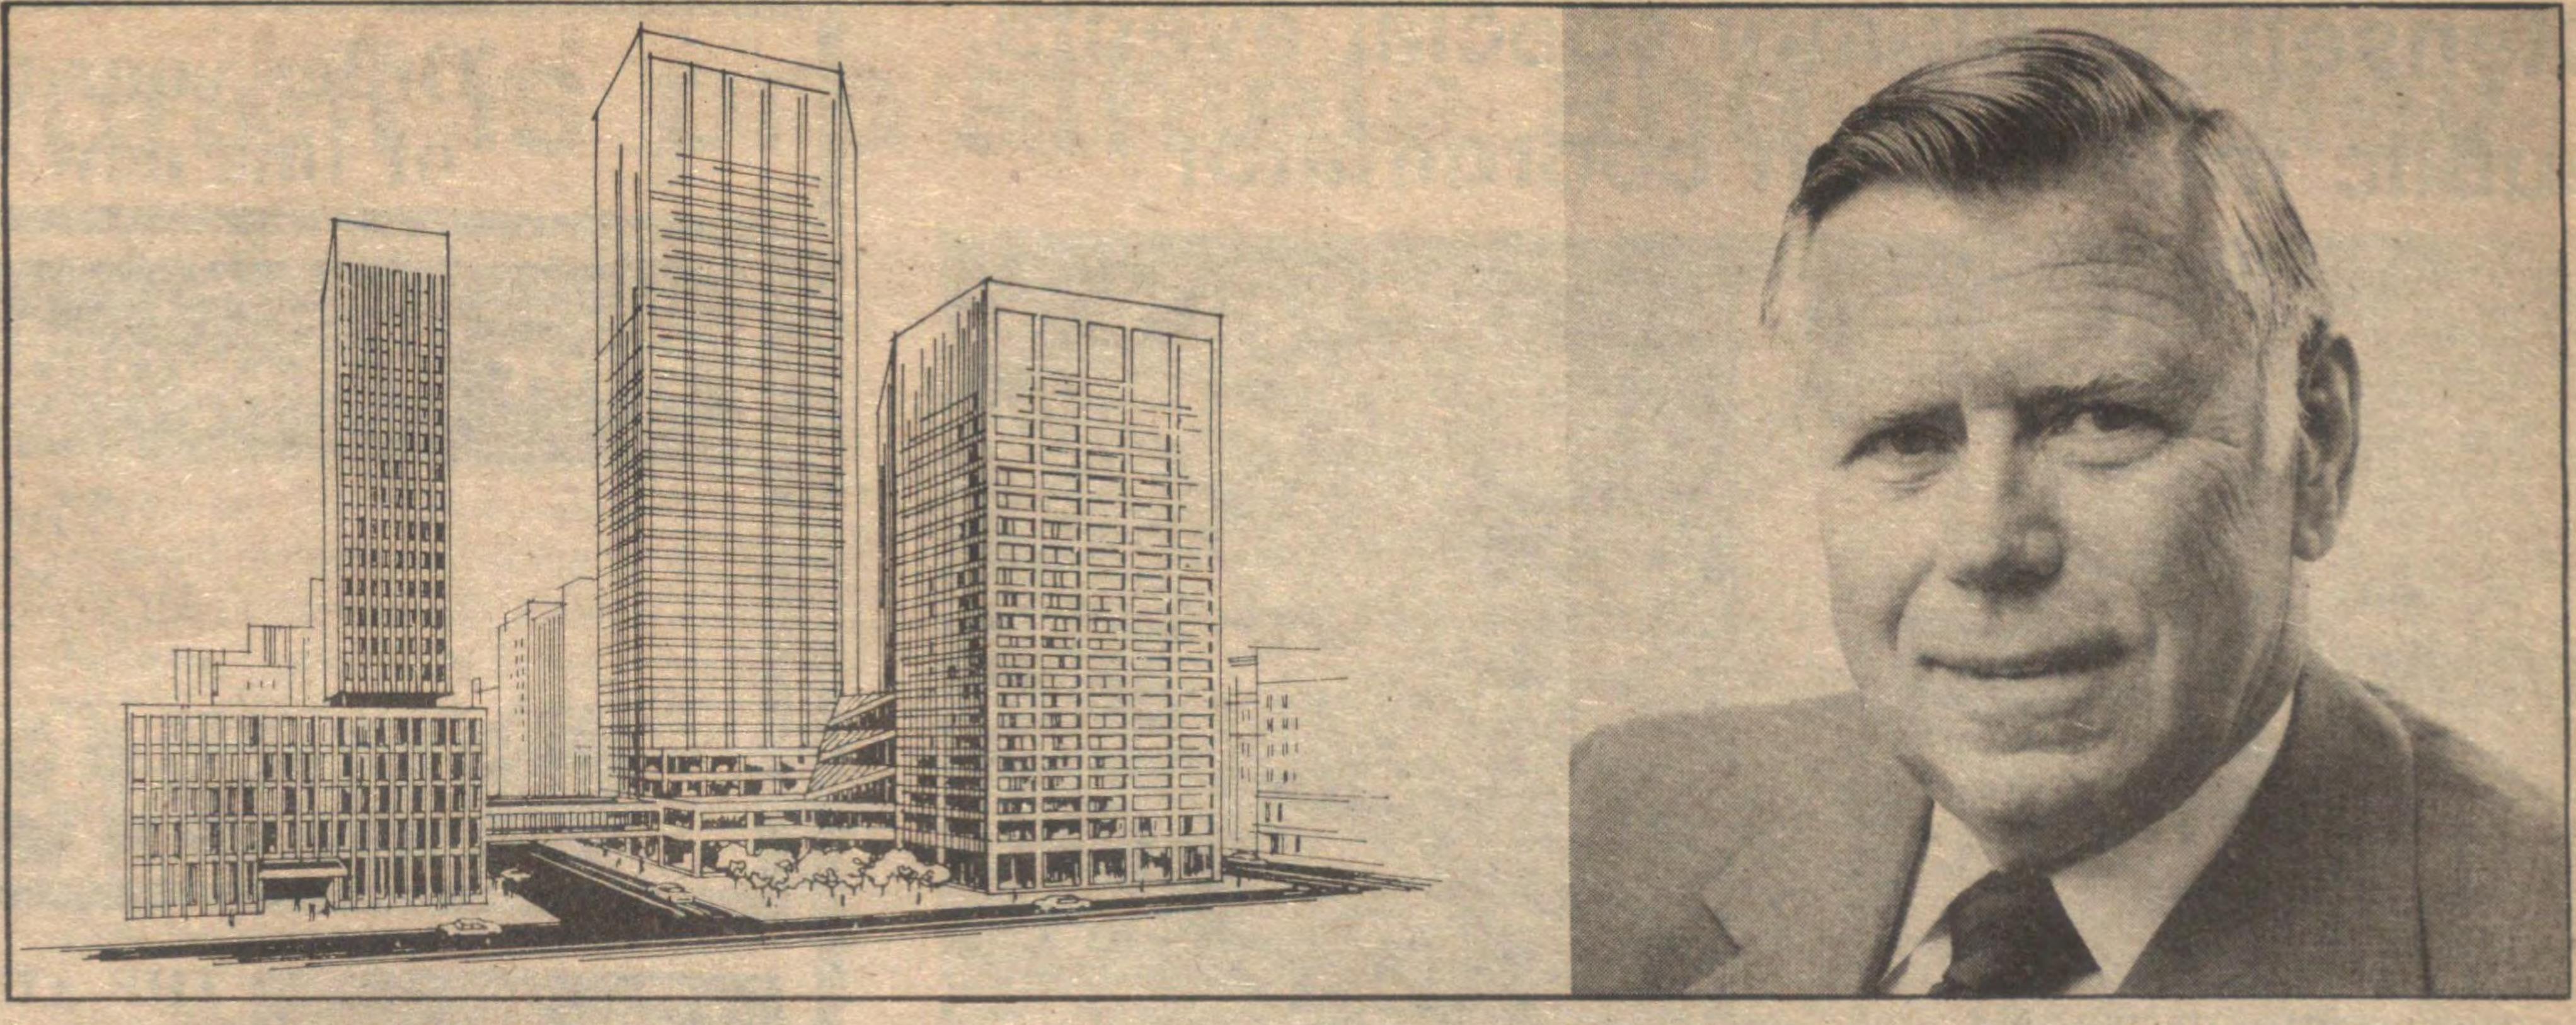

Military service interrupted Grangaard's schooling between his junior and senior years; he entered the Army for a five-year stint after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Grangaard advanced to the rank of first lieutenant, serving primarily with the Office of Strategic Services in the China-Burma-India Theater.

Upon his return to Minneapolis and re-employment in banking (he had grown comfortable in banking by that time), he found that a number of changes had been made in the night law school program to accommodate the large numbers of men returning from the war. Consequently, it took him two years to complete his senior year, but in 1948 he earned his law degree — cum laude — from the William Mitchell College of Law.

Although he was admitted to the bar in Minnesota, Grangaard has never practiced law. By the time he earned his law degree, he said, he had begun receiving regular promotions in bank clerical positions and his future in banking looked bright.

Hard work — not only during his schooling, but also during his years with First Bank System — was second nature to Grangaard, and it clearly accelerated his professional movement.

First Bank System, formed in 1929

First Bank Place, Minneapolis-the address of First Bank System headquarters and the offices of Donald Grangaard, '39.

as First Bank Stock Corp., is a holding company comprising 88 banking units throughout Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Wisconsin. The management structure, support staff and operating philosophy of First Bank System, Grangaard noted, "have evolved into a decentralized system of operating units, supported and controlled by a headquarters staff."

And Grangaard moved rapidly through various levels of that system. After earning his law degree, he became an analyst in the credit review department at First Bank System. He then worked as a vice president for affiliate banks in Fairmont and Austin, Minn., where customers frequently encouraged him to engage in the practice of law.

Although he never formally practiced law, Grangaard said he has found his legal education very useful. He said he "resisted customers' requests to practice" because he could then "tell customers what to ask their legal advisers, and interpret the answers for them.

"Lawyers and corporate legal problems," he added, "don't intimidate

In 1959, Grangaard returned to the First Bank System headquarters, and 10 years later was named president and chief executive officer — the same year he received UND's Sioux Award. In 1977, he began planning for what he terms the "orderly process of executive transition," by bringing a former executive back as president. Grangaard took over as chairman of the board, and retained the title of chief executive officer. In 1981, he relinquished the title of chief executive officer, noting he would continue as chairman until his retirement in 1983. According to company policy, Grangaard will remain a director of First Bank System for three years after his retirement.

During his years in banking, Grangaard has seen a number of changes take place.

"The old, traditional activities are being broadened because customers are demanding more versatile services," he said, "and non-banking services such as Sears and Shearson-American Express are offering a range of financial services."

As president, chief executive and chairman of a large holding company, Grangaard has always made it clear that "we don't run banks." But, he said, "our responsibilities are to search out new and better policies and strategies, to install these strategies and to monitor performance." This is done, he said, through a close relationship with bank managers. He added that much of his time has been spent dealing with regulators, shareholders and federal and state legislators — groups that affect and are affected by the First Bank System.

Grangaard laments that he has not returned "often enough" to the UND campus, but he retains strong ties to the University. Son John, one of his five children, earned a law degree from UND in 1979, and a number of years ago Grangaard brought the late Adrian McLellan, '37, '39, to Minneapolis as First Bank System's executive vice president.

Just down the street from Grangaard's office, former classmate and now national chairman of the UND Foundation Centennial Drive Arley Bjella, '41, is chairman of the board and the executive committee for Lutheran Brotherhood.

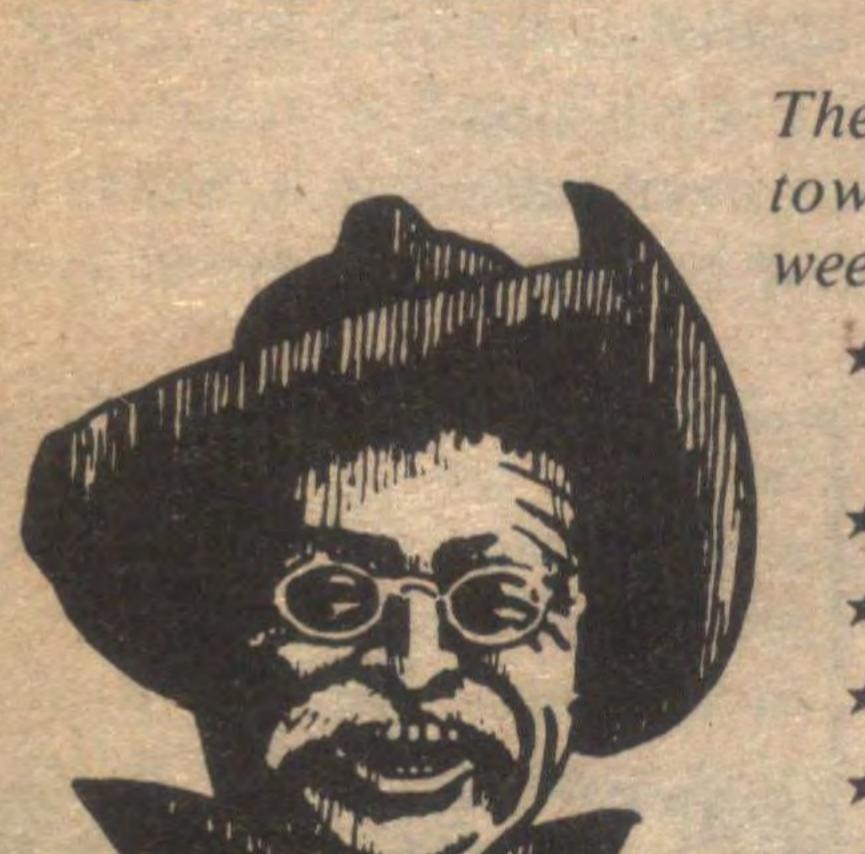

Grangaard also ran into Clara Hyslop, sister of the late UND benefactor Ken Hyslop, '06, at the First Bank in Austin; her husband was president there.

Furthermore, Grangaard said, he knows of "lots of UND grads in First Bank System in management positions at various banks."

As his retirement approaches, Grangaard is considering a return to school, "maybe to study philosophy," but he also has several pet public-service projects to keep him busy: he serves as a trustee of Fairview Community Hospitals and the American Lutheran Church and as a regent for Augsburg College, all in Minneapolis

He said he and his wife Irene will stay on in Edina, and he's sure he'll be able to keep busy. In the meantime, Donald Grangaard will continue to put in 16 to 18 hours a day for the First Bank System — working in an industry he once had no intention of making a career.

Friday and Saturday, July 30-31 will be UND Weekend at Medora!

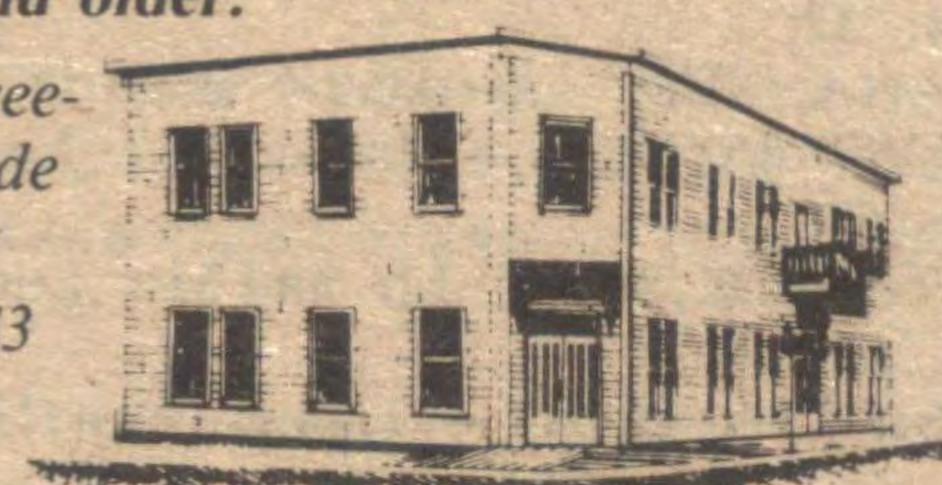

The North Dakota Badlands, Theodore Roosevelt National Park, and the historic Roughrider town of Medora are North Dakota's top tourist attractions. So we've put together a great

- weekend for UND alumni and their families, which includes: * Get-acquainted buffet dinner and program Friday at the Chuckwagon. Cash bar on the patio
 - at 6 p.m., buffet dinner at 7 p.m. adults $6, children $3. * Children's Mini-golf Tournament and Shooting Gallery "shoot-out", Saturday at 10 a.m.
 - * Saturday noon bison-burger picnic at the Chuckwagon patio $4 per person.
 - * Saturday afternoon a horseshoe tournament for the adults.
 - * A six p.m. social hour with cash bar, Saturday.
- * A unique pitchfork steak fondue dinner beginning at 7 p.m. Saturday. Price is $13 for adults, $6 for children (steak), $3.50 special children's menu.
- * The famous Medora Musical at the Burning Hills Amphitheater at 8:30 p.m. Saturday. Reserved seat tickets are $7 for adults, $5 for children age six and older.

This will be our second annual UND Medora Weekend! Last year everyone had a great time seeing the magnificent badlands country where Teddy Roosevelt once ranched. Enjoy the multitude of available activities including trail riding, fishing, tennis, and many more.

The UND group will be staying at the Badlands Hotel. Rates are $39.50 double ($34 single), $3 additional for each child age six or older.

Mail the reservation coupon directly to the Badlands Hotel, where UND alumnus Rod Tjaden, '63, is handling the arrangements. Telephone: 701-623-4422

News brief

By at least one measure, students in the University of North Dakota School of Law are far ahead of their peers nationwide in terms of preparing for an active career in the practice of law.

More than 87 percent of all UND law students are active in the American Bar Association's Law Student Division, ranking UND at the top of 172 law schools nationwide surveyed by the ABA. Marquette University in Wisconsin came in second, with 86.8 percent of its law students participating in the ABA student division.

Karl Warden, dean of the UND Law School, noted that UND's level of student participation in ABA "says something about the community of the Law School" at UND. "There is no requirement that students participate," Warden said. "It's strictly voluntary. This suggests that the majority of our students see themselves as nascent practicing attorneys, not simply as students."

Stenseth is Alumni special events, public information coordinator

University of North Dakota alumni who made it back to campus for the 1982 Alumni Days probably noticed the Alumni Office's newest staff member she seemed to be everywhere.

She is Cari Guemple-Stenseth, '78, '82, who will serve as special events and public information coordinator for the UND Alumni Association and Foundation. One of her first special events was the show of fashions from the 1930s and '40s put on for the President's Luncheon during Alumni Days.

Stenseth joined the Alumni Office in January on a part-time basis while completing work on a master's degree in vocational education. She is now a fulltime employee of the Association and Foundation.

"We are very pleased to have Cari join our staff on a full-time basis," Earl Strinden, Association and Foundation executive vice president, said in announcing Stenseth's appointment. "She is an enthusiastic and talented individual and she is looking forward to organizing numerous special alumni activities for the Centennial year."

Stenseth, '78, '82

Stenseth holds a bachelor's degree in distributive education from UND, and before returning to campus last fall taught marketing and management at Lake Region Community College in Devils Lake, N.D., where she was also involved in many civic and professional organizations.

She and her husband Mark, '78, live in Grand Forks.

People over 60 can enroll in courses at 3 North Dakota campuses this summer

People 60 years old or older can spend a week attending college this summer at the University of North Dakota as well as two other state institutions of higher education.

The Elderhostel program will be offered July 18-24 at UND and Dickinson State College and July 25-31 at Minot State College. Elderhostel, according to Beverly Brekke, professor of special education at UND and state coordinator for the program, is a nationwide network of colleges and universities offering residential continuing education for anyone over the age of 60 who wants to explore new ideas and meet new people.

Students in the program can enroll in one to three courses, each of which meets for one and a half to two hours a day. Although no college credit is earned, Brekke noted that participants enjoy an opportunity to share ideas and broaden their interests.

Elderhostel classes offered at UND focus on Indian culture, rituals and ceremonies, and arts and artifacts. Interested persons should contact Brekke for further information.

News brief

Future generations of North Dakota anglers may benefit from research by Jown Owen, a biology professor at the University of North Dakota.

While on leave from his post at UND, Owen is conducting a study for the State Game and Fish Department aimed at determining the need for new fish hatcheries in the state.

James Ragan, the department's fish hatcheries chief, said Owen is studying the need for additional warm-water facilities for such fish as northern pike, walleye, bass and panfish, as well as coldwater operations for species such as trout and salmon. The biologist will also explore the possibility of using warm waste water from electrical generating plants to increase the numbers and size of fish stocked in the state's lakes.

Owen hopes to have his study completed and recommendations ready in time to submit proposals at the next session of the State Legislature, Ragan said.

Ever Westward to the Far East

CHESTERIZ

THE AUTHORS The memory of Chester Fritz and the pen of Dan Rylance have combined to produce an unusual story of a remarkable bullion trader and philanthropist.

THE STORY Sensitive to the human touch, the book portrays a modern Marco Polo and unfolds the thoughts, hopes, ambitions and achievements of a person who started from scratch. The reader comes along on a long, exciting journey from Buxton, North Dakota, to Monte Carlo.

AN AFFINITY FOR NORTH

DAKOTA The stewardship of Chester Fritz to the University of North Dakota is told with tenderness. The product of an unhappy childhood, Fritz becomes an international trader in precious metals but decides to share his fortune with "a warm hand." As columnist and friend George Sokolsky wrote: "Even though Chester Fritz has traveled the world over, he always will return to North Dakota. That is where he was born and that is where he belongs."

SIGNIFICANCE TO THE WORLD OF BUSINESS The book, however, is more than a story of one man's gift to his native State. It is a story of China, the excitement of the international silver trade, of World War II and the post-war gold market and the astronomical prices of silver and gold in the 1970's.

Chester Fritz was "Mr. Silver" in China between World War I and World War II where he first represented the American Metal Company, Ltd., of New York as a single employee and later through his firm of Swan, Culbertson and Fritz, the largest investment firm in the Far East. Fritz exported large amounts of silver into China buying and selling in a variety of currencies and arbitrating daily in an atmosphere of high pressure.

FROM DISCONTENT TO FORTUNE. The book is also a story of disappointment and discontent. The Japanese invasion of China, World War II and the revolution in China largely destroyed a successful investment firm, interned Fritz in a Japanese camp and left him without a firm or a home. Yet, out of these years of discontent, Fritz became a leading gold trader in the post-World War II period and made another fortune on his own.

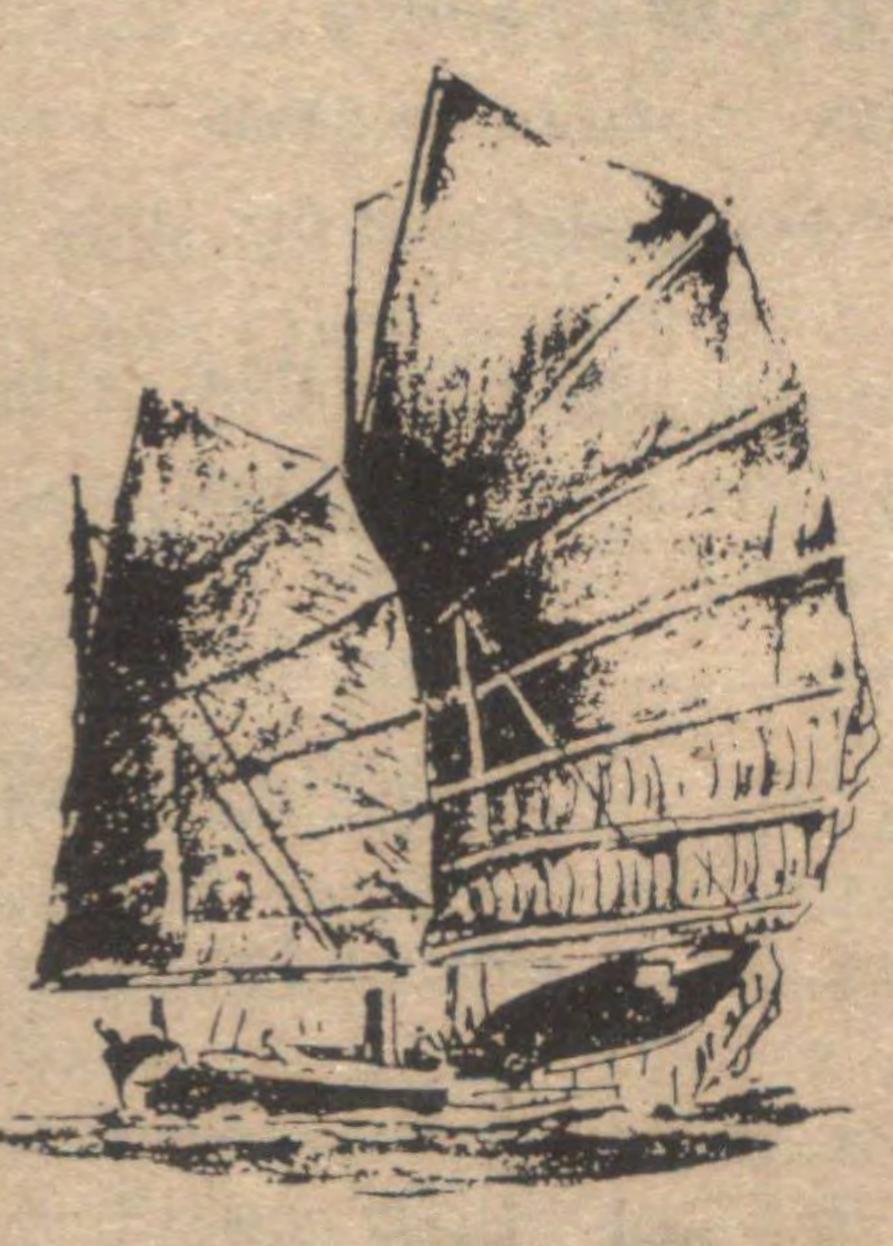

EXPERIENCE BOLSTERS 'RIDE TO TOP' The sale of his Gstaad, Switzerland home (Chalet Vera) in 1977 at the age of 85 for 4,500,000 Swiss francs (2.7 million in U.S. dollars) constituted a major transaction for Fritz. In obtaining the highest price ever paid for a Swiss chalet against younger members of the international business community, Fritz stood firm and obtained his price.

In the world of high inflation spawned by large increases for oil, Fritz with over 50 years of experience in silver and gold got in on the bottom floor of low silver and gold prices and rode them to the top.

SUPERB SPORTSMAN A man of many dimensions, Fritz earned a reputation as an accomplished horseman. A tough competitor against the British community in Shanghai, he won more than his fair share of Paper Hunts and was one of the leading polo players.

AGING: THE POSITIVE APPROACH Unwilling to retire and live comfortably, Fritz has maintained daily control of his personal and financial activities. Today at 90, Fritz sets a remarkable example of a positive approach to aging — including physical exercise, mental projects, a careful diet and a daily routine.

'74 grad Fennell is pro athlete and attorney

Dave Fennell and his Fighting Sioux football alumni teammates dropped their traditional springtime confrontation with next fall's varsity squad, but in the unlikely event Fennell's coaches on the Edmonton Eskimos Canadian pro team drop him from the roster after that loss, at least he'll have something to fall back on.

In addition to being one of the top defensive linemen in the Canadian Football League, Fennell is also a practicing attorney in Edmonton, Alberta.

He was back on campus both for the alumni-varsity game (his first since 1978), and to present a couple of lectures on athlete contract and labor negotiations and sports torts at the University of North Dakota School of Law.

A physically imposing man (6-foot-5, 270 pounds), Fennell would clearly strike terror into any quarterback's heart. Off the field, however, his is a far more cerebral profession.

As an attorney, Fennell specializes in commercial development. His role in the 12-member firm of Lennie, De Bow, & Martin involves helping commercial clients work their shopping mall or housing development projects through the byzantine world of permits, zoning regulations, building codes and so forth.

It's an unusual combination of careers, but it has worked well for Fennell ever since he went to the Eskimos after graduating from UND in 1974. He had lettered all four seasons that he played for the Sioux, and when he returned to his home town of Edmonton, the Eskimos wanted him. And since the team's practice sessions are usually held in late afternoon, Fennell was able to pursue his goal of going to law school at the University of Alberta.

It's continued to work out that way since he began practicing law in 1978.

And although his legal work often takes him abroad, he can occasionally fit in a visit back to UND — but not enough to satisfy him.

"It's unfortunate that I don't get back here as often as I'd like," Fennell told the Alumni Review.

As a result, he spent much of his last visit a few weeks ago chatting with former instructors and just wandering around campus. And, as he told one mentor from his student days, it was amazing how strong his ties to the alma mater are.

Fennell's return to UND was also a boon to the 40 or so law students who took in his lectures, which combined the perspectives of practicing attorney and professional athlete.

Dave Fennell, '74 (No. 65 above), has earned a reputation as one of the most valuable defensive linemen in the Canadian Football League by putting this kind of pressure on an opposing quarterback. Off the field, his law practice keeps him busy.

Former student 'sizes' up situation for patient's relief

It will probably stand out as the biggest challenge — literally — in Dr. Thomas Amberry's professional career.

Amberry, 'ex 46, has been practicing podiatry for many years in Long Beach, Calif., but it had to be a new experience for him when George Bell — all seven feet, eight inches of him — walked into the Amberry Podiatry Clinic. Bell's feet were badly pinched in the sneakers he was wearing; the size 19½ shoes were the largest he could find anywhere but were still six and a half sizes too small for his size 26 feet.

Amberry tends to the podiatric needs of many area college athletes, and ever since Bell (the star center on the basketball team at Biola College in nearby La Mirada) came to the podiatrist with an ankle injury in October, Amberry was determined to get him into some decent-fitting shoes.

Finally, in April, several custommade jumbo pairs arrived from a company Amberry had contacted in Wisconsin. For the first time in many, many years, Bell's feet felt good in footwear.

"George may not have told anyone," Amberry said, "but I know the new shoes feel better than anything he's ever had before. Six and a half sizes is quite a difference."

George Bell, left, and his size-26 feet posed quite a challenge to Dr. Thomas Amberry, ex '46, a podiatrist in Long Beach, Calif.

there involved linguistic consulting, editing of technical articles for publication and teaching linguistics at the local university.

1972

Peggy A. Hanson (Vangsnes), '72, has been vocal music director at Twin Spruce Junior High School in Gillette, Wyo., for the last eight years. Her husband Tom is a math teacher at the school.

Dr. Corey L. Nyhus, '72, '74, '76, and his wife Betty (Meland), '72, '73, live in Jamestown, N.D. where Corey practices medicine. A star athlete before his years on the UND baseball team, he was called back to his old high school in Harvey, N.D., to be the feature speaker at the school's athletic banquet in April. He and Betty have two daughters.

Brian Heskin, '72, is branch manager of Empire Savings in Grand Junction, Colo. He and his wife Mary have one son and live in Grand Junction.

Richard Heine, '72, and his wife Deborah (Olson), '71, live in Cincinnati, Ohio. They have two children. Rick is district sales manager for McNeil Pharmaceutical.

Herbert Schulke III, '72, is a captain and pilot on a DHC-6 airliner for Allegheny Commuter in Atlantic City, N.J. He recently completed training on the 50-passenger DHC-7, a model he expects to begin flying for Resorts International, an Atlantic City casino. Herb lives in Rio Grade, N.J.

David Reeve, '72, is an Air Force captain stationed at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. He lives in Lompoc, and is assigned to the Minuteman Intercontinental Ballistic Missile Test and Evaluation Branch of the 1st Strategic Aerospace Division.

Linda Laskowski, '72, '73, has received her master's degree in business administration from the University of Nebraska, and is now a district manager for Northwestern Bell telephone, with responsibility for all cable maintenance and residence installation and repair in Omaha and Fremont, Neb. She lives in Omaha.

Dennis Pozarnsky, '72, is married to Marie Ann (Franzen), '73. They live in Butte, Mont., where Dennis recently accepted a senior electrical engineering position in the generating department of Montana Power Co.

Marilee Tischer (Grant), '72, was recently promoted to personnel assistant at the 3M TelComm Products plant in Wahpeton, N.D. She and her husband Ronald live in nearby Breckenridge, Minn.

Duane Marvick, '72, and his wife Sharon (Kritzberger), ex '72, live in Des Plaines, Ill. Duane is director of engineering and systems at the corporate distribution headquarters of Ben Franklin in Des Plaines. He and Sharon have two children.

Sandra M. Blevins (Boschee), '73, lives in Des Moines, Iowa, where she is field director for the Iowa Retail Food Dealers Association. She has also completed her comprehensive examinations for a master's degree in personnel administration at Drake University. Sandra was recently named to the list of "Outstanding Young Women of America."

Erma J. Hove, '73, now teaches high school mathematics at the Stavanger, Norway, American School. She is also coordinator of the school's math-science department.

Bettie J. Scherer (Keegan), '73, lives in Loveland, Colo., and spends much of her time at home with her two daughters, ages 2 and 10 months. Her parental duties do not prevent her from serving as secretary of the local League of Women Voters, however. Her husband Dan works for Eastman Kodak in Windsor.

Richard Kadry, '73, recently joined the Fargo, N.D., office of Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith Inc., following an intensive training program at the firm's national offices in New York City. He continues to live in Grand Forks.

John F. Kihne, '73, and his wife Susan A. (Hoffman, '72), live in Mandan, N.D. John teaches industrial arts at Mandan High School, and was recently selected as the 1981-82 "North Dakota Industrial Arts Teacher of the Year."

James M. Dalglish, '73, is division sales and distribution manager for Northern States Power Co. in Grand Forks. Earlier this year, he received the North Dakota Society of Professional Engineers distinguished service award.

Bequest continues Vera Bollinger's contributions to education

By JOHN VANVIG

Education and Vera Bollinger grew up together in North Dakota.

The daughter of pioneer parents, Miss Bollinger first attended and then taught in one-room schools, which in North Dakota in the early 1900s were the clearest sign of the importance of education to the state's settlers. But Miss Bollinger's 45-year career in education also covered institutions of higher learning, and she retired as a professor emeritus from Valley City State College.

The University — and the state — of North Dakota lost a good friend when Vera Bollinger died last winter at the age of 87. But her memory and that of her parents, Charles and Emma Bollinger, live on in the endowment Miss Bollinger left in her parents' names with the UND Foundation.

"I give, devise and bequeath," she stated in her last will and testament, "all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal, whatsoever and wheresoever located, to the University of North Dakota Foundation...I direct that Charles and Emma Bollinger Memorial Scholarships be established in honor of these two North Dakota pioneers, my beloved parents."

That endowment, some $170,000, will be used to provide scholarships for "needy and deserving" pre-medical and medical students at UND. If the Foundation Board of Directors decides that scholarships for pre-med and med students are in adequate supply, however, Miss Bollinger directed that the endowment be used in "other University schools and departments" or for "such projects and purposes as such Board of Directors may deem worthwhile and proper."

Thus Vera Bollinger, the last surviving member of a family of early arrivals in North Dakota, has helped continue the process of education she began in a one-room country school near Bisbee, N.D.

Although she had planned to attend Mayville (N.D.) State Teachers College after graduating from high school in 1912, one of her teachers persuaded her to go to UND instead. With money scarce, however, she took a year to teach in Rolette, N.D., before getting a two-year teaching certificate from UND in 1915.

She went from UND to teach in country schools near Bathgate, N.D., and her hometown and then went back to the University for her bachelor's degree, which she earned in 1919.

With bachelor's in hand, she began a teaching odyssey that took her to Mayville (where she also served as assistant principal of the high school), Faribault, Minn., where she was the high school dean of women, Jamestown and Devils Lake.

Eager to continue her education, Miss Bollinger returned to UND in the early 1930s to begin work on her master's degree, which she received in 1932. While doing graduate work, Miss Bollinger also taught at UND and Dickinson State College — in addition to serving as head resident at Davis Hall.

In 1936, she began her 21-year career on the faculty of Valley City State College, where she taught English and dramatics. At Valley City State, she also served as dean of women and helped found its Zeta Sigma chapter of Kappa Delta Pi, an honorary education society. During the summers, she studied at the University of Denver and the University of Washington. She was a member of the American Association of University Women for more than half a century.

The UND Alumni Association recognized her lifelong dedication to education in North Dakota in 1980, when Miss Bollinger was presented with the Sioux Award, the highest commendation UND can bestow. Grace Bowen, a friend and fellow educator, also received the Sioux Award that year.

At the awards presentation, Alumni Association Executive Vice President Earl Strinden pointed to her long career of teaching and said:

"In honoring this remarkable woman, we are also paying tribute to a vanishing group of North Dakotans, the country school teacher. Vera and her teaching colleagues of those pioneer days deserve the status of heroines and heroes in our state."

Strinden also quoted from "A Portrait of a Special Lady," a piece about Miss Bollinger written in 1978 when she was honored by the Valley City State College chapter of Kappa Delta Pi:

"(Miss Bollinger) believes that if but one life has been given greater freedom and nobler vision, then our work has not been in vain. She views the teacher as an image of love, not for love's sake but for the sake of youth. She believes a teacher draws on our heritage to inspire and direct, to strengthen moral character and enhance personality. In all, she believes in an enrichment of lives through education."

The "enrichment of lives through education" will continue, thanks to the Charles and Emma Bollinger Memorial Scholarships begun as one of Vera Bollinger's final contributions to her career.

Foundation news

Harris & Klemer

Steven H. Harris and John N. Klemer, '52, have contributed a large geophysical log collection, valued at more than $58,000, to the University of North Dakota geology department.

The geophysical logs are a valuable addition to the resources of UND's geology programs, according to Don Halvorson, geology department chairman.

"The collection has been cataloged and included in our departmental library," Halvorson said. "This collection is already being used in classes and in research by both students and faculty."

Mosaic Lodge No. 11

Mosaic Lodge No. 11 of Emerado, N.D., has contributed more than $250 to the University of North Dakota Foundation for the establishment of the Jack Mayfield Scholarship Fund.

The fund, established in honor of this longtime friend of UND, is open to other groups and individuals wishing to support and assist student athletes at UND.

"This scholarship will be appreciated by many striving Sioux athletes," said UND Foundation Executive Vice President Earl Strinden.

Lander

The Mim Lander Memorial Scholarship Fund has been established with the University of North Dakota Foundation through an initial contribution of more than $1,500 from the Lander family in memory of Miriam Lander.

Miriam Lander (Yoder), '21, was an active member of the Delta Gamma sorority, and annual awards from this memorial fund will go to a deserving UND member of Delta Gamma. Persons wishing to contribute to the fund may do so by addressing contributions to the UND Foundation for the Mim Lander Memorial Scholarship Fund.

MacMaster

A. D. "Archie" MacMaster of Williston, N.D., has contributed $10,000 to the University of North Dakota Foundation to establish an endowed scholarship in honor of two UND graduates; his wife Neva Hydle MacMaster, '29, and her late mother Nellie Johnson Hydle, '01.

The Neva Hydle MacMaster/Nellie Johnson Hydle Scholarship will be given annually to deserving students majoring in English.

"Archie has been a long-time supporter of UND," said Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Foundation. "This endowed scholarship is a great tribute, not only for two UND graduates, but also to a mother and her daughter."

Gillette

The John M. Gillette Memorial Award has recently been established within the University of North Dakota Foundation. This award, made possible through a generous gift of $5,000 from an anonymous donor, will be for a graduate or undergraduate student majoring in sociology and will be based on results of research paper competition.

Dr. John Gillette came to UND in 1907 and served on the University faculty for 42 years. He also served as president of the American Sociological Society in 1928. Because of his expertise on rural society, Gillette was often referred to as the "father of rural sociology."

"There are so many ways in which Dr. Gillette served his profession, his state and the University," said Dr. Arne Selbyg, chairman of the UND sociology department. "Thanks to the generous gift which makes this award possible, we can begin to honor and encourage some of the people who are setting out to follow in his footsteps."

Contributions to the John M. Gillette Memorial Award should be made to the University of North Dakota Foundation for the Gillette Memorial Award.

Alumni Merit Scholarship

The University of North Dakota announces the establishment of the Alumni Merit Scholarship Fund, initiated with a $500 contribution from an anonymous donor. The sole criteria for this scholarship will be academic merit as based on undergraduate grade-point average for the recipient's previous academic year.

"We are very pleased to administer this merit scholarship," said Earl Strinden, Foundation executive vice president. "UND has continually attracted top students in all fields of study. This merit scholarship will be most significant in recognizing the scholastic achievements of the students who receive this award."

The initial contribution was presented as a challenge gift to encourage others to contribute to this fund, which eventually could make several merit scholarships available. Contributions should be made to the UND Foundation for the Alumni Merit Scholarship Fund.

Saiki

The Dr. A. K. Saiki Memorial Endowment Scholarship has been established within the University of North Dakota Foundation, through contributions from former medical students in the classes of 1928 through 1971.

Dr. Saiki came to UND in 1925 from the University of Hawaii. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in medicine in 1926 and received his M.D. degree from the University of Nebraska. Dr. Saiki returned to UND in 1928 and served as a medical educator at UND for nearly 50 years.

"During his many years as professor of pathology in the Medical School, Dr. Saiki was one of the most respected members of the UND faculty," said Earl Strinden, Foundation executive vice president. "He was a unique individual who dedicated his life to the UND Medical School and to his students."

Contributions to the Dr. A. K. Saiki Memorial Endowment Scholarship should be made to the UND Foundation for the Saiki Endowment.
