Heavy Advance Inquiries Indicate Record Enrollment

A record enrollment of typing and business education teachers from high schools, colleges and universities throughout the United States and Canada is expected for the second World Institute on the Teaching of Typewriting July 5-7 at the University of North Dakota.

Early registrations have been unusually heavy and judging from the number of inquiries received, attendance is expected to exceed 500, according to Dr. John L. Rowe, chairman of the University business education department, who is director of the institute.

About 410 persons attended the first world typing institute at UND in 1958, which attracted international attention through an experiment in the teaching of touch typewriting on electric typewriters to third and fourth grade children.

Seventeen specialists in the fields of typewriting instruction and business education from seven states will be included in the program.

Stella Willins, Port Chester, N. Y., the world's amateur typing champion and four time holder of the women's international typewriting contest record, will demonstrate her skills and lecture at the institute.

Miss Willins, manager of the school department of the Royal McBee Corporation, holds the contest record of 135 net five stroke words-per-minute for one continuous hour. Her score in this contest was 99.99 per cent—24 errors in more than 8,000 words typed.

Other persons participating in the program are L. M. Collins, educational consultant for International Business Machines, New York; Dr. Peter L. Agnew, assistant to the chancellor and executive vice president, New York University; Dr.

Federal funds totalling $49,261 will be added to construction monies for an addition of two floors to the North Dakota Rehabilitation Center attached to the University of North Dakota Medical Center.

The funds were originally allocated to the Montana State Health Board. Montana Governor Donald Nutter was authorized to approve the transfer to North Dakota after the Montana Board of Examiners was advised the money would revert to the federal government June 30 unless used or assigned to another facility.

County Superintendent of Schools Holds Down Job; Is Student, Too

By EMMA ANNE SHANKS

Mrs. Klingensmith

Summer school brings to the University of North Dakota campus students from many areas and many walks of life. One of these is Thelma H. Klingensmith, Morton county superintendent of schools, Mandan, N. D.

Mrs. Klingensmith is continuing her work in graduate studies toward a master's degree in elementary education. She is also working at her job as county superintendent.

Her background includes rural and high school teaching near and in Almont, N. D., and seven years as assistant superintendent of a large Indian Work at Ponca City, Okla., of which her husband was superintendent. This included educational work in Chilocco and Pawnee Indian boarding schools.

Mrs. Klingensmith is the mother of two children, a daughter who is a first grade teacher in the Spring Branch schools of Houston, Texas, and a son who is a botany professor at Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y.

Mrs. Klingensmith's husband, Don, is the manager of the Mandan Window Co. in Mandan.

As to school reorganization in Morton county, Mrs. Klingensmith said that in each case the individual student has an opportunity for a better education. Morton county has five enlarged districts, three by reorganization and two by annexation.

Although the number of one-room schools in these districts has decreased, they have not disappeared. Mrs. Klingensmith feels that in areas with sparse population and long distances the one-room school has a contribution to make.

Science Institute Students to Visit Naval Air Station

The complex workings of the United States Naval Air Station at Minneapolis will be examined on July 6 and 7 by students of the University of North Dakota's Summer Science Institute.

A plane from the Air Station will fly the students to Minneapolis early the morning of July 6 and return them to Grand Forks late the next day.

Purpose of the trip as explained by Prof. J. Donald Henderson, head of the Summer Science Institute, is to give high school teachers a better understanding of certain phases of their classroom work.

"Most teachers haven't even been in a plane and a trip such as this gives them a much better understanding of what they are teaching," Prof. Henderson said.

While in the air, observations of cloud formations, temperature changes and related conditions will be made.

In Minneapolis, a complete tour of the Air Station is planned, including stops at the subdetecting depot and the parachute packing building. If time allows, Prof. Henderson hopes to arrange a tour of Wold-Chamberlain Airport in Minneapolis, to inspect the various devices used by commercial airlines.

Journalism Head On Assignment In Minneapolis

Alvin E. Austin, chairman of the journalism department at the University of North Dakota, is spending the summer practicing some of the things he preaches all year long in the classroom.

Austin is working on the copydesk of the Minneapolis Tribune. He will also critique the Tribune's operation after observing it for several weeks.

Last year he was in charge of a news training program in the newsroom of the Burlington, Vt., Free Press. Three college graduates who had no journalistic training or experience were taught newswriting fundamentals and newsroom practices.

During the summer of 1959, he was on an assignment in the Miami, Fla., Herald. Austin conducted a study on opportunities in newspaper

Softball Starts With Four Short Ones

The University of North Dakota's Summer Softball League got off to a surprising start last week as the first four games played were called after five innings because of the 10-run rule. (If, after five innings of play, one side leads by 10 runs or more, the game is ended.)

Results of the first six games played were as follows:

Kannowski Invited To Join in Study Of Social Insects

Dr. Paul B. Kannowski, associate professor of biology at the University of North Dakota, is one of six United States scientists who have been invited to participate in the Fourth International Congress on Social Insects at the University of Pavia, Italy September 9-14.

Dr. Kannowski will speak on "Comparative Flight Behavior of Formicine Ants." His research on flight behavior of ants has been supported by grants from the UND faculty research fund, the Society of Sigma Xi and the National Science Foundation undergraduate research participation program.

The congress, which meets about every four years, is a meeting of research scientists from throughout the world. Talks and discussions of current research on all aspects of social insects are presented at the Congress.

Dr. Kannowski has been awarded a travel grant by the National Science Foundation to cover the cost of transportation to the congress.

UND Human Relations Institute to Study Tensions Arising from Group Differences

Techniques for better inter- and intra-group relations will be studied by participants of an Institute on Human Relations at the University of North Dakota on July 10 through 21.

Offered in cooperation with the Commission on Education Organizations of the National Conference on Christians and Jews, the Institute will provide study in the field of inter-group education.

In addition to techniques, the group will study tensions arising from racial, religious, ethical and cultural differences and promising practices in inter-group relations; relate the acquired knowledge and skills to the unique opportunities each individual has for changing attitudes and social behavior; and have direct experience with people of varying backgrounds working to resolve tensions and conflicts.

The program was designed for school administrators, teachers, counselors, social workers, nurses, ministers, civic leaders, police, military personnel, management and labor officials and interested citizens.

Director of the institute is Dr. W. Levi Cash, Jr., professor of psychology at UND. Application forms for admission to the institute may be obtained on request from Dr. Cash, room 207, Education building.

"Freedom Rides" Were Exploratory, Professor Says

By LOWELL EDWARDS

The "Freedom Rides" were an exploratory movement in the opinion of Dr. W. Levi Cash, professor of psychology at the University of North Dakota.

The "Riders" did not set out merely to create a disturbance when they challenged segregation in Southern bus terminals, he believes, but the publicity blossomed up and the participants received more than they had intended. It would have been better for all concerned had they received less.

"The less publicity in a case like this, the better," said Dr. Cash.

"Whether the 'Freedom Rides' were good or bad depends on how you look at it. Who can say for sure? I can't. It is one way of attempting to solve a problem."

Dr. Cash regrets that the "Freedom Riders" wouldn't agree to cooperate with the Justice Department and ease off somewhat. He feels that the "Riders" had made their point and should not have

Instead, Dr. Cash feels that the situation should now be left to legal authority.

Asked about the racial situation in North Dakota, Dr. Cash said that he did not believe it to be a serious problem. He, personally, has not encountered many difficulties when entering public establishments. He added, however, that he is not a typical example because of his connection with the University.

In conclusion, Dr. Cash said that he believes the time is right for changes and that this is a period of transition; but it is human nature to resist changes so the question is "how far to push?"

Dr. Cash has been associated with UND since last September. His degrees include: B.A., Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.; B.D., Oberlin Graduate School, Ohio; M.S.T., Oberlin; M.A., University of Michigan, Ann Arbor; Ph.D., University of Michigan.

NOTICE

All students who are graduating in August and have not yet applied for a degree must do so not later than July 5.

ADDRESSES WANTED

Students who have not yet reported their local addresses to the registrar's office are requested to do so at once.

Army Assigns Col. L. E. Patch To War College

Reassignment of Col. Lloyd E. Patch, professor of military science, has been announced by the Army ROTC department of the University of North Dakota.

He will attend the U. S. Army War College, the Army's senior service school, in Carlisle, Pa. Col. and Mrs. Patch and their three children will leave Grand Forks on July 7, 1961.

Col. Patch came to UND in September, 1958. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army in 1938 through the ROTC program at Boston University where he obtained his bachelor's degree in business administration.

During World War II Col. Patch served in Normandy, the Rhineland, Ardennes and Central Europe with the 17th and 101st Airborne Divisions. He is a senior parachutist and his combat decorations include the Distinguished Service Cross, Silver Star, Bronze Star, Combat Infantryman Badge and Distinguished Unit Citation.

He has also been awarded the Army Commendation Medal. Other foreign service includes duty in Korea, Japan, Panama, England, Scotland, France, Holland and Belgium.

In departing UND Col. Patch said he is happy about his new assignment as a student at the U. S. Army War College but he will regret leaving the campus.

He also said that, "The past three years as professor of military science at UND have been one of the most enjoyable, satisfying and challenging assignments I have experienced."

Col. Patch added that he is grateful for the cooperation rendered to the ROTC program by President George W. Starcher, the deans, administrators and faculty members.

Col. Patch's successor has not yet been named.

PDK Told Teacher Shortage, Fund Lack Limit State's Special Education Classes

North Dakota's classes in special education are observing their tenth birthday, it was noted by Miss Selma Southwick, Quincy, Ill., summer session instructor in University of North Dakota classes in methods of teaching exceptional children and the mentally handicapped.

"During this period," she said, "enrollments in special education have increased from 472 in 1951-52, to 4,124 the past year."

Miss Southwick pointed out that in spite of this increase in children being accommodated through special education, only 24 per cent of the children in North Dakota who have been diagnosed as in need of special education services are now receiving them.

Her remarks were made Monday night at the second summer session meeting of the UND Alpha Theta chapter meeting of Phi Delta Kappa, national honorary professional education fraternity, in the Education auditorium. She spoke on the subject, "Special Education—What is it?"

"Two major obstacles limit the growth of special education services in North Dakota," she said. "One is limited state funds to assist local effort; the other is a shortage of qualified teachers in this field."

Tracing the growth of special education nationally, she said it represented an outgrowth of the democratic philosophy that every individual is entitled to an education adequate for his needs.

Miss Southwick defined the program as a means of providing students who have needs which cannot be met in regular classroom situations with special help to assist them in becoming adequate, contributing members of society.

Since this usually requires small classes with from eight to 12 pupils, rather than the usual 25 or 30, such programs are expensive, she said, indicating that more state funds will have to be made available to assist local districts in providing services if the 76 per cent of the state's children who are not being provided for are to receive the training they need.

Miss Southwick gave credit to many community organizations and parents groups for their support of special education, mentioning the the Parent Teachers Association, the Association for Retarded Children, Kiwanis International, Lions International, the United Commercial Travelers, the Alexander Graham Bell Association, and other service organizations as having been particularly effective.

Among those she listed as needing special education services were the gifted, educationally mentally handicapped, emotionally handicapped, those requiring special speech or hearing training, and the physically handicapped.

This is the second summer Miss Southwick has taught classes in special education at UND. Prior to that, she instructed one summer at Minot State Teachers College, and three summers at the University of Florida.

Her talk was part of a series of educational informative programs scheduled for the summer session by Phi Delta Kappa. The next such meeting is slated for Wednesday night, July 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the Education auditorium at UND and is open to the public.

Dean Lewis Named To Committee on Fraternity Relations

Dr. Charles L. Lewis, dean of students at the University of North Dakota, has been named to a 10-member committee on fraternity relations of the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators.

Purpose of the standing association committee is to develop programs to provide information on fraternities to the members and to maintain relationships with national fraternities.

Dr. Lewis has also received reappointment as editor of the Journal of College Student Personnel. This is a quarterly publication of the American College Personnel Association which is distributed to its 2,800 members. Lewis has served as editor for two years.

The publication will be produced from Grand Forks, Lewis said.

Professor Explains New Justice Courts

Relationship of the newly created county justice court to the other courts of the state was discussed in a speech by James P. White, assistant professor of law at the University of North Dakota, at the annual meeting of the North Dakota State Bar Association in Williston last week.

The office of county justice was created by the 1959 Legislative Assembly of North Dakota after it abolished the office of justice of the peace. The change becomes effective July 1.

North Dakota's Only Active Paleontologist Heads for "Classical Area of Geology"

By SIG KRISTJANSON

The University of Wales via New York and London is the destination of University of North Dakota paleontologist Dr. F. D. Holland, Jr.

Dr. Holland left Wednesday, June 28, for New York City. There he will rendezvous with 20 professors of geology and fly to London. These are the men chosen by the American Geological Institute and the National Science Foundation to take part in the institute, "British Isles—1961."

"Broad spectrum geology is the theme of the institute," Dr. Holland said. Many areas in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland will be scheduled for the institute.

"We will be doing our research in the classical area of geology," Dr. Holland added.

Much of the pioneer work in scientific geology was carried out in Wales. The Ordovician and Silurian periods in geological history are both named for ancient Welsh tribes. The deposits of both these periods were first studied in Wales.

"Though much work has been accomplished there, a great deal remains to be done in this richly fossiliferous region," Dr. Holland said.

The only trained paleontologist actively engaged in the field in North Dakota at present is Dr. Holland. In a paper read before the North Dakota Academy of Science May 5, 1961, Dr. Holland pointed out the need for more work in paleontology in North Dakota.

Dr. Holland is presently working on a systematic catalog of all fossils and fossil collecting areas in North Dakota. To date 488 species and 294 genera and sub-genera have been entered in the catalog.

"At least one fossil plant and 14 animal fossil forms have North Dakota place names in their scientific names," he said. For example, a fossil clam is named for the abandoned post office at Schaller."

According to Dr. Holland the Red River Valley has been rather poor territory for the paleontologist, but "it has not been intensively worked," Dr. Holland said.

Spigle, director of audio-visual education at the University of North Dakota, was the North Dakota representative to the National Education Association audio-visual convention in Miami, Fla. Spigle, a member of the convention's legislative committee, presented a talk on budget procedures for programs in college and universities.

Anthropologist Plans to Study Mescal Bean Cult

Dr. James H. Howard, associate professor of sociology and anthropology at the University of North Dakota, has received an $850 grant to study the psychological effects of eating the narcotic "mescal bean."

The red mescal bean is the center of a rapidly vanishing religious cult, Howard said. Under the grant received from the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, New York City, Howard will investigate narcotic properties of the bean to check if it might be utilized in combating mental illness.

Howard is interested in the religious rituals connected with the eating of the bean and consuming of a tea prepared from the bean. The mescal bean cult was thought by many to be extinct, he said.

Included in Howard's Indian studies of North Dakota is research among Indians who practice a religion which involves eating the peyote button. The peyote button has chemical properties which produce hallucinations when eaten.

He believes there may be some relationship between the two religious cults.

Phy Ed Professor To Head Workshop

Two physical education workshops for elementary classroom teachers will be conducted later this summer by Mrs. Grace O. Rhonemus, associate professor of physical education for women at the University of North Dakota.

One will take place at Lookout Mountain, Golden, Colo., while the other will be staged at Western College of Education, Dillon, Mont. These will be presented to give classroom teachers more information on teaching physical education.

Mrs. Rhonemus has conducted several similar workshops in the past including one at Dodge City, Kans., from May 29 to June 3. Sixty Kansas elementary teachers received instructions in self-testing, rhythms and games.
