Lutheran Brotherhood, Bavendick gifts set advance pace

Centennial Campaign Fund drive nears halfway point of goal

Advance gifts to the University of North Dakota Centennial Campaign have reached $10,519,234, or about 42 percent of the $25 million goal, according to Arley Bjella, '41, chairman of the drive.

And these figures include gifts only through the end of November, he said, pointing out that December was a particularly good month as alumni took advantage of tax advantages that were slightly more favorable in 1982 than will be the case in 1983.

Two of these pace-setting gifts are being announced this month:

*A $100,000 gift from Lutheran Brotherhood in recognition of the contributions to the fraternal insurance society by alumni of UND, notably headed by its board chairman, Arley R. Bjella.

*A gift of mineral rights by Frank and Joanne Bavendick of Bismarck valued at $456,009 under 200 acres of North Dakota land in the most productive part of the Williston Basin.

The advance totals consist of gifts since July 1, 1981, the date authorized by the UND Foundation board to begin the advance gift campaign. A number of major gifts are still to be announced.

Included in the $10.5 million total are $4.5 million in testamentary and life estate gifts, $3 million in life or term income arrangements, $100,000 in corporate/business/foundation gifts and $2.7 million in direct gifts of cash, property, securities and pledges.

Another measure of the excellent progress being made so far in the Centennial Campaign, Bjella said, is the growth since July 1, 1982, of memberships in the UND Foundation's giving clubs.

In the past six months, he said, the number of "83 Society" memberships ($1,000 level) has grown from 205 to 297, up by 92 members or 45 percent; Presidents Club memberships ($10,000 level) have grown from 108 to 124, up 16 for 15 percent; and UND Benefactors memberships ($100,000 level) have grown from 20 to 27, up seven, or 35 percent.

"Beginning this month, Alumni Review will list new members of the giving clubs," Bjella said. "This issue includes the names of those alumni and friends who have qualified since July 1, 1982."

The Lutheran Brotherhood gift has been designated as an endowment fund earmarked for the benefit of the teaching and research programs of the UND College of Business and Public Administration.

"The fraternal benefit society is indeed very grateful to your school for the excellence of its educational programs and for the contributions of its many alumni to Lutheran Brotherhood and the Upper Midwest business community," said Charles DeVries, company vice president for communications. "The

The 1982-1983 Sustaining Fund drive — organized separately from the Centennial Campaign — is moving ahead very briskly, according to Jim Seifert, University of North Dakota Foundation president and annual drive national chairman.

As of Jan. 21, 1983, the drive has raised $320,658.11 of its goal of $500,000, and had received contributions from 3,793 of its goal of 7,500 alumni.

Included in this issue is a listing of class chairmen who soon will be writing to class members asking for full participation during the 1982-83 Sustaining Fund drive. Winners of the class competition are announced in the September issue of Alumni Review.

Historical play premiere, Community Gala to mark UND's 100th anniversary Feb. 27

The people of Grand Forks and surrounding areas will join the University of North Dakota in celebrating its Centennial with two major events sponsored by the UND Alumni Association on Sunday, Feb. 27 — 100 years to the day after the founding of the University.

That day will see both the premiere of an original historical play about UND and the Grand Forks UND Centennial Community Gala, expected to be the biggest of the more than 60 UND birthday parties scheduled this year throughout the state and nation.

The first performance of the UND Centennial Stage Production, "Beacon Over Our Western Land," will be at 2 p.m. that Sunday at the Chester Fritz Auditorium, with a repeat performance at 8:15 p.m. the following day.

Written by Joan (Castagnoni) Eades, '77, "Beacon Over Our Western Land" condenses nearly a century of UND history into a fun-filled, 80-minute look at life on the campus, from the time when the University was a single building on the prairie west of Grand Forks through wars, Carney Sings, the Depression and the Sixties. A highlight of the show will be President Thomas J. Clifford portraying himself in the final scene, reciting segments of his inaugural address in 1971 at the request of Eades and director H. Douglas Fosse, '70.

Fosse has assembled a cast of community and campus actors for the production, which was commissioned and sponsored by the Alumni Association. Tickets for the show are on sale for $5, $4 and $3 (with a 50 percent discount for students and senior citizens and children 12 and under admitted free) at the Chester Fritz Auditorium and all Centick outlets.

A community committee headed by Dr. Dan Goodwin, '60, '62, and his wife Shirley is planning the UND Centennial Stage Production.

Meanwhile, John Marshall, '59, '62, and his wife Sharon (Seiffert), '61, are overseeing a community committee planning the Centennial Community Gala, which begins with a social reception at 6 p.m. Feb. 27 at the Grand Forks Civic Auditorium.

The gala banquet follows an hour later, accompanied by talks by North Dakota Gov. Allen Olson, Clifford and Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the Alumni Association and Foundation. Several UND musical groups will perform, and the highlight of the banquet will be a special big-screen showing of "University of North Dakota: The New Century," the Centennial film funded by the UND Foundation and produced by the award-winning Bill Snyder Films of Fargo, N.D.

Tickets for the Centennial Community Gala, at $12 each, are available at the Chester Fritz Auditorium, Centick outlets and the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center on the UND campus.

Rob Larson, ex '61, and his wife Judy chair the community committee in charge of publicity and promotion for the Feb. 27 events as well as other community events coming up later in the Centennial year.

Report from campus

By Earl Strinden Alumni Assoc. Executive V-P

Pioneer mothers influenced course of education

The males of society have, it seems, received most of the credit for overcoming the adversities of settling these great prairies. I believe, however, that at least equal credit — and maybe more — must go to the pioneer mothers. They are the true heroines of North Dakota.

This is confirmed for me in reading the many letters we have been receiving from early graduates. These letters give vivid descriptions of unbelievable hard work and sacrifice by both a mother and a father. But most often, it was the pioneer mother who was the center, and often the strength, of the family.

It was usually the mothers who encouraged and even insisted that the children continue their education. Many of our alumni have commented they would not have enrolled at the University of North Dakota in those early years but for the encouragement of their mothers.

A number of UND graduates and former students have established named memorial scholarship endowments honoring and remembering their pioneer parents. This is a wonderful way to give a living memorial to a mother and father who sacrificed so their children would have opportunities for more prosperous and enjoyable lives.

History emerges from letters

It is impossible to mention all the letters we receive. But please continue to write. Your letters are greatly appreciated. We will, as space is available, make mention of some of the letters in this column.

Recently, we received a letter from Bea Helmer Agard, who grew up on a farm near Larimore, N.D., and now lives in Glendale, Calif. Bea, who is 94 years old, wrote a long and interesting letter which she titled, "Memories of a Happy and Often an Exciting Life."

She wrote: "In June, 1905, I won a scholarship to two colleges in Minnesota, but chose UND because the car fare was less! It was the beginning of a wonderful new life . . . Dear Dean Brannon! I shall always remember him. I had not been able to register in his biology class for six weeks because of an eye injury, yet he accepted me and assigned a student to help me. This student was Maxwell Anderson, author of "What Price Glory," 10 years later. He and Ira Frendberg were two of the most talented students on campus!

"I have a consuming love of beauty in any form. It began with my first view of the gorgeous northern lights fanning out over the snowy prairies when I would bring the cattle home in the late evenings. That delight and beauty was fostered by all my University teachers. Dr. Koch was my English instructor. He was just out of Harvard and a Shakespeare scholar, a delightful person! Then there was Professor Hult, who taught Greek poetry — translations, a poet himself! They were most outstanding. However, Dr. Libby, who specialized in American history, gave a wonderful perspective on the effects of the Ice Age and its importance to North Dakota farmers. He thrilled us with his description of the great inland sea that had flooded the whole Northwestern and Central states with a rich blanket of minerals washed down from the Rockies. It must have inspired Tom Campbell, Dr. Merrifield's son-in-law! It was only a few years later that Tom developed the largest wheat farm in the United States, located in Montana, and thus, made North Dakota a part of the 'Bread Basket of the World.' Hurrah for Dr. Libby!

"I've had a rich and interesting life these 94 years; most of it parallels that of UND, for I was born just five years after the University was founded, only about 30 miles distant."

Dr. Clarence D. O'Connor, '21, from St. Thomas, N.D., and now living in New York wrote, "The existence of the University of North Dakota today is a magnificent monument to the pioneers who settled in this great state in the last century. My father, Archie M. O'Connor was one of those pioneers . . . In the latest part of the 19th century when the University was in danger of expiring in its infancy, he and a number of other pioneers contributed to a fund which enabled UND to survive and eventually reach its present eminent status. When I enrolled in 1915, the enrollment was somewhere around 500. The loyalty and devotion of the University is eloquently demonstrated in a recording in the Alumni Review of the thousands of alumni who contribute regularly to its various purposes, and particularly those large contributors who have been abundantly blessed with this world's goods and have so generously shared with their Alma Mater."

Centennial off and running

UND's Centennial year is off to a good start. The first of over 50 planned UND 100th birthday celebrations was held in Bismarck on Thursday, Jan. 13, with about 800 in attendance, including UND alums Gov. Al and Barb Olson, other alumni, friends, legislators and elected officials.

The Varsity Bards have never sounded better, and everyone seemed to enjoy the premiere showing of the UND Centennial film. President Tom Clifford spoke briefly on behalf of the University. Merlin Dewing, president of the Alumni Association, brought greetings from 70,000 UND alumni, and Arley Bjella, Centennial Drive national chairman, spoke of the sense of appreciation shared by UND alumni for the quality education they received at this great University.

This is the start of a busy and exciting year for the Alumni Association and the University. Centennial planning has been under way for three years, and we believe the year-long UND Centennial celebration will be the best of any college or university in our nation.

By the way, the Centennial film, which was made possible by funding from the UND Foundation, has been shown by almost every television station in UND's service area. We are receiving many nice comments about this professionally produced film.

Please don't miss an opportunity to be involved in UND's historic Centennial activities by attending a UND birthday celebration in your area and by returning to the campus during 1983. We are looking forward to seeing you.

LOST ALUMNI

Can you help us find them?

The University of North Dakota Centennial is approaching, and we are trying to get our address records in the best shape possible. We've lost contact with the people listed below. Some have not been heard from since graduation, some have moved and not sent us a forwarding address, some have married and changed their names, some may have even died. We need your help. If you know where any of these people are, or if they are deceased, drop a note with address or date of death to Alumni Records Supervisor, UND Alumni Association, P.O. Box 8157 University Station, Grand Forks, ND 58202.

Persons are listed by last known name, year graduated, and hometown.

University serves as a source of graduates for employment for Lutheran Brotherhood at the Minneapolis home office and in the society's field force in North Dakota and throughout the nation."

Bavendick, '52, is president of Westex Petroleum Corp. in Bismarck and has long been involved in mineral exploration and development. He and Joanne have three children, one of whom, Kellia Bavendick Herman, is a 1977 UND graduate. Bavendick joined the Alumni Association board of directors in the spring of 1981, and has been one of the strongest advocates of the UND Centennial Campaign.

The Bavendicks' gift of 200 perpetual net mineral acres under lands in McKenzie County hold tremendous promise for the future of the University, said Foundation Executive Vice President Earl Strinden.

"In addition to the current lease and annual delay rentals," he said, "there have been significant oil and gas reserves established just three miles to the west and a deep well is presently drilling less than two miles to the east."

In keeping with the philosophy of the Centennial Campaign, the gift will be endowed to benefit future generations of students in perpetuity.

As reported in the January Alumni Review, the Centennial Campaign is switching into high gear with the appointment of volunteer committees to conduct three broad efforts: a national drive, a Grand Forks community drive and a University drive.

The campaign had been quietly under way for some time with the solicitation of advance gifts. The more visible, public part of the campaign began on a phased basis in January, with most solicitation to be completed by June 30, 1984, and follow-up details completed by Dec. 31, 1984.

John M. "Jack" West, center, a 1931 UND graduate and son of former UND President John C. West, recently donated a cable pottery vase to the UND Foundation. Receiving the vase were Bonnie Sobolik, assistant director of the Alumni Office, and Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Alumni Association and Foundation. The vase was made by Jack West's mother Edith in 1931.

News briefs

The Grand Forks County Extension Office and the University of North Dakota's Medical Center Rehabilitation Hospital are cooperating on a workshop for disabled farmers to be offered this summer.

The workshop, planned for July 21-22 at the Grand Forks Civic Auditorium, will focus on showing disabled farmers how to increase their ability to maintain a farm operation through the use of adapted machinery, clothing and buildings. Information on preventing hearing loss and avoiding farm accidents will also be presented.

But planners said they need the help of farmers who are already using some of these techniques.

"The workshop is a long way off, but we need to start finding people with modified equipment as soon as possible," said Morris Davidson, Grand Forks County extension agent.

An unusual mix of attorneys, school administrators, sports officials, coaches and athletic directors will gather at the University of North Dakota next month for the UND School of Law's Sports Law Symposium.

The one-day symposium on March 5 will feature speakers from throughout the United States and Canada. Topics to be covered include antitrust, tax aspects of the professional athlete's contract, liability of coaches and administrators in amateur athletics, contract negotiations and civil and criminal liability for player actions while participating in athletic events.

More information on the symposium is available from the Law School Dean's Office, University of North Dakota, University Station, Grand Forks, N.D. 58202.

The North Dakota Weather Modification Board has awarded the University of North Dakota Center for Aerospace Sciences a $24,000 contract to continue research and evaluation on cloud-seeding techniques in the state.

The four-month analysis will provide additional information on the effectiveness of techniques the board and UND researchers have been using since the mid-1970s. Such evaluations help maintain sound scientific standards and controls for the nation's longest running weather modification program.

The $24,000 contract brings to a total of $400,000 the amount of research contracted by the Weather Modification Board with UND.

"North Dakota, North Dakota, with thy prairies wide and free, all thy sons and daughters love thee. . . ."

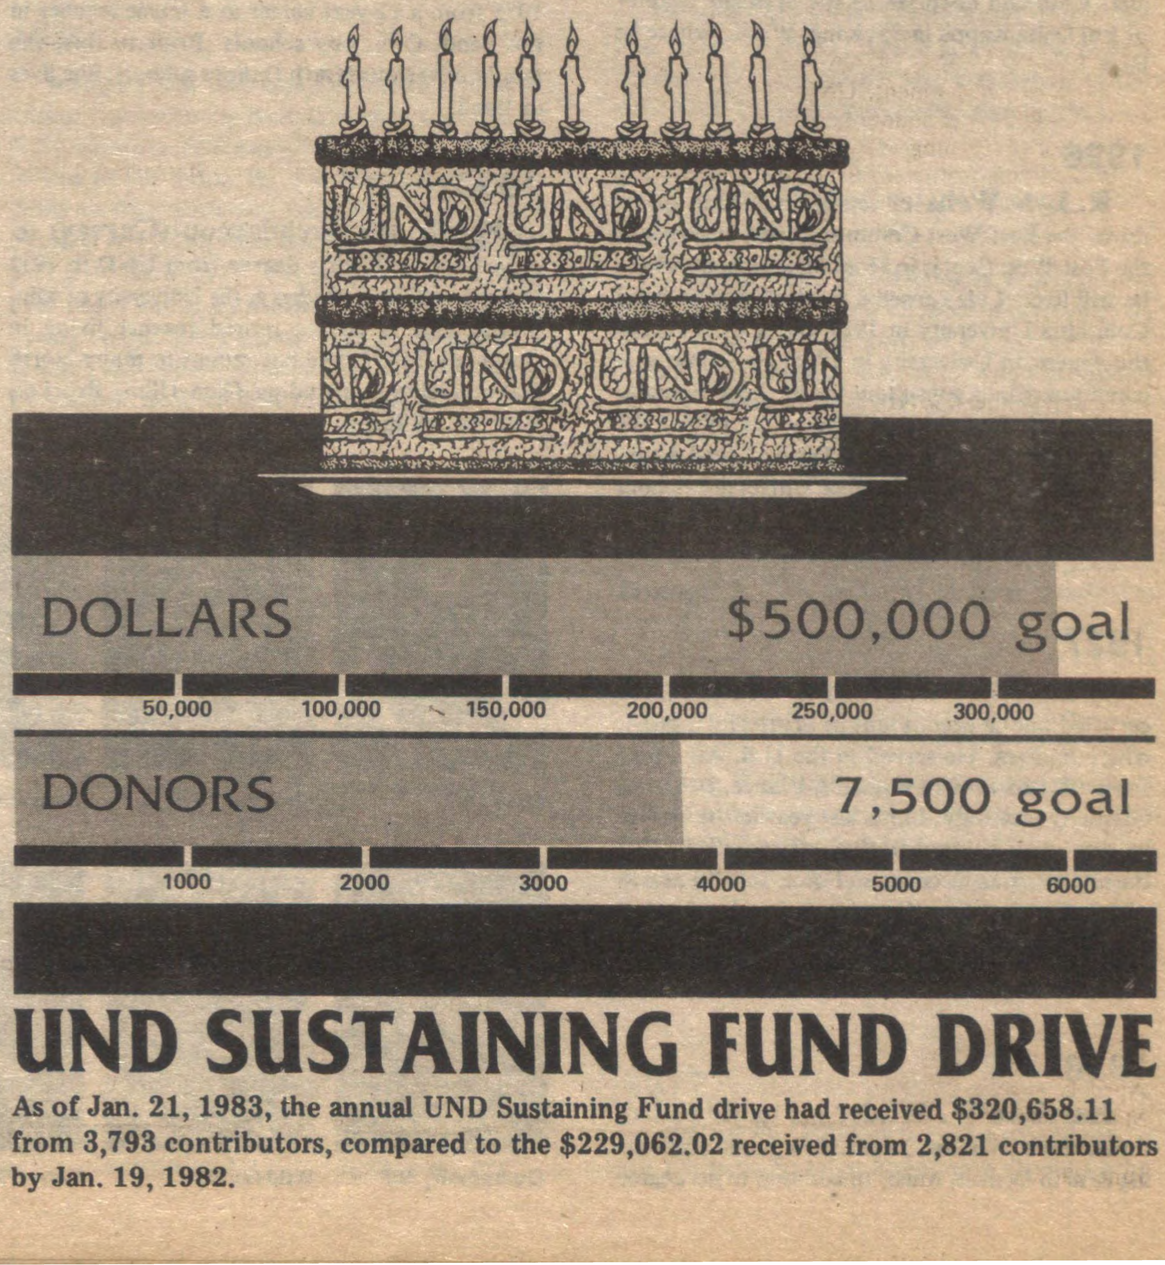
Those are the opening words of the North Dakota Hymn, written in 1927. Visitors to the state symbols exhibit at the North Dakota Heritage Center in Bismarck can now hear the hymn sung by three state musical groups, one of which is the University of North Dakota Concert Choir.

The UND choirs' performance of the hymn was taped late last year for year-round use at the Heritage Center. The other two groups taping the hymn for the center exhibit are the Shanley Boys Chorus of Shanley High School in Fargo and the State National Guard Chorus.

Responding to a state and national need for increasing numbers of high school science teachers, the University of North Dakota Office of Student Financial Aids, the UND chapter of Sigma Xi scientific fraternity and the University's Center for Teaching and Learning have established two scholarships for UND education students who plan to teach high school science.

Two students will be chosen each year to receive $500 O'Connor-Sigma Xi Science Education Scholarships. UND junior and senior students enrolled in science education who intend to teach high school science will be eligible for the scholarships. "The next phase of the scholarship program will include scholarships for incoming freshmen who intend to teach high school science," said Gerald Hamerlik, dean of enrollment services at UND. "That phase should begin in the next few months," Hamerlik added.

Funding for the O'Connor-Sigma Xi Science Education Scholarships will come from the J.F.T. O'Connor scholarship fund.



UND SUSTAINING FUND DRIVE

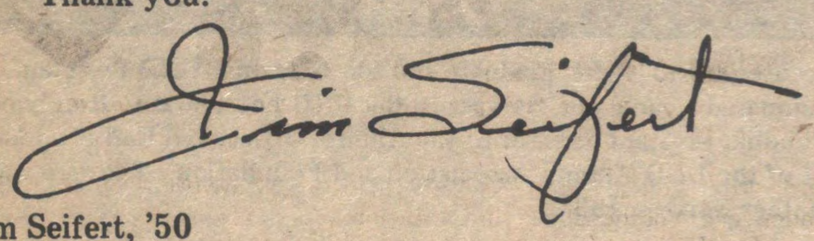
As of Jan. 21, 1983, the annual UND Sustaining Fund drive had received $320,658.11 from 3,793 contributors, compared to the $229,062.02 received from 2,821 contributors by Jan. 19, 1982.

Meet your class chairmen: profiles listed

It is my pleasure to introduce the chairmen for the University of North Dakota's 1982-83 Sustaining Fund drive. These people have volunteered their time and efforts to help us achieve—and, we hope, surpass—our Sustaining Fund goals of $500,000 from 7,500 alumni and friends.

With the help of loyal alumni such as these, UND will be able to enter its second century as an even stronger institution of higher learning.

Your support will be appreciated in this important Centennial year. Thank you.



Jim Seifert, '50
President, UND Foundation
National Chairman, 1982-83 Sustaining Fund Drive

Former student actively advocates infant nursing

By SUSAN BERG

Breast milk, the world's original fast food, gave way this century to infant formula, regarded as the most modern and convenient method of feeding babies.

Formula relieves women of the need to produce enough milk for their nursing babies; it's also less time consuming than breast feeding.

But studies are indicating higher mortality and morbidity rates among formula-fed infants than those that are breast-fed. Manufacturers can not reproduce certain substances and proteins found in mother's milk. Moreover, infant formula frequently is misused, often by poor women who dilute it to make it go further.

Dr. Carmen Acosta, ex '52, is among several health care professionals nationwide advocating breast feeding. "We're not re-inventing the wheel," she pointed out, noting that many women today are returning to breast feeding their infants.

Acosta teaches health care research at the University of Houston — Clear Lake campus in Texas. With a doctorate in sociology and anthropology, her training sparked an interest in nursing mothers and maternity management.

"The United States as a whole has not encouraged breast feeding," she stated. "The job market makes it tough for child-bearing women, and breast feeding further compounds the 'infraction'. Employers ought to develop maternity leave programs in order to insure healthy infants."

Noting an "enormous poor population" in Houston, Acosta became involved with an intervention program to promote breast feeding by poor women. These women often bottle-feed infants so they can return to work as soon as possible.

"Breast feeding has become inconvenient for hospital organizations as well," Acosta said. "We have developed at enormous expense to ourselves intricate, specialized units" for infant care. Mothers, trying to be "good" patients, cooperate with hospital systems until breast feeding is outmoded, she added.

Acosta has conducted psychological and physical research on mothers with nursing difficulties, and produced papers about the mother's condition and resulting depression when unable to nurse a baby.

Breast milk banking has existed since the 1930s and probably earlier. It's a combination of biochemistry and nutrition, Acosta remarked, "an optimal collection, storage and distribution of breast milk." Mothers try to save their extra milk for a variety of reasons: to beef up their own supply, get rid of extra milk or simply to contribute.

"There are generous nursing mothers everywhere," Acosta said with

The University of North Dakota Foundation: supporting the entire academic enterprise.

As illustrated below, the University of North Dakota is a large and complex academic enterprise, so much so that it would be impossible for colleges and departments to conduct their own fund-raising campaigns. That's where the UND Foundation is of assistance, serving as a centralized "United Fund" mechanism for the entire campus. If you wish your gift to the annual Sustaining Fund drive or to the Centennial Campaign to be restricted to a specific department or program, rest assured that your wishes will be carried out when you contribute to the UND Foundation. Last year, for example, restricted gifts by alumni and friends were placed in no fewer than 200 separate ear-marked accounts.

U prof's collection of early valentines reflects romantic age

By LaRUE LAUB

These are valentines with a past. Their colors are subtle but rich in variation. A labyrinth of lines adorns every inch; they fairly dance with detail. The messages are simple — "truly thine" or "to my valentine."

Thomas Howard, an associate professor of history at the University of North Dakota, has put together a rare collection of more than 700 valentines produced in Germany for the American market between 1900 and 1920.

"They were inexpensive to buy and inexpensive to mail," Howard said. "Most of the postcards would have cost you a penny and the postage would have been a penny."

Howard said many were handmade and were of better quality than valentines produced in this country. "American manufacturers simply couldn't afford the labor that went into it," he said.

Another part of Howard's collection consists of larger, more elaborate fold-out valentines. Howard said these may have cost an ardent admirer as much as 75 cents.

"Americans were just coming out of the Victorian era," Howard said, "a time when elaborate art was popular. It was going into a period of 'art nouveau' — an attraction for things old, things classical, but done in a very elaborate, gingerbread style. They couldn't get enough of that elaborate, romantic portrayal of the past."

Using valentines from his collection to illustrate his point, Howard said, "something as brutal as a cannon with a flower carriage and shooting doves or an automobile filled with flowers" were attempts to romanticize the contemporary world.

Howard's collection began by chance in an antique shop in Fertile, Minn.

"I found three old valentines," he said. "One had a Cupid on it dressed like a colonialist. Being a colonial historian, I just had to have it.

"After I had them framed, I found there wasn't any way to arrange those three in a grouping so that they looked right. Of course, I had to have some more."

That was eight years ago.

"I enjoy collecting them," Howard explained, "because they are a little bit of sentiment that has survived from an age that was much more sentimental than ours."

To qualify for his collection, a card must portray Cupid. The Cupid of one valentine has human hair and a bow and wings made of silk.

"Over the years during this period," Howard said, "more and more you had Cupid portrayed as a little girl. Also during that period, you had him getting younger and younger."

Howard said Cupid fell into disfavor beginning in the 1930s when Valentine's Day turned into a children's holiday. He said American manufacturers turned out mass-produced valentines very cheaply with "cartoon art and the kind of little puns kids would like."

Reproductions of the earlier, elaborate cards are available, he said, but "they seem to appeal to a very limited market."

A native of Indiana, Howard has been a UND faculty member for the past 15 years.

A selection of Howard's antique valentines will be on display this month on the fourth floor of UND's Chester Fritz Library.

Thomas Howard and a few of his prize valentines. The UND associate professor of history has some 700 early 20th century valentines, each portraying Cupid, in his collection.

a wide smile. "It's surprising how many there are. I've worked with over 2,000 women and collected bathtubs full of milk."

Finding milk is one part of the work involved, but proper extraction and storage are also required.

Milk must be extracted so as not to harm the mother or deny the nursing baby its milk. Acosta said she was not completely satisfied with any breast pumps available in the United States.

"Injuries can result from improper use and it seems cruel to me to give nursing mothers these tools that can hurt them," she said.

Acosta has traveled the world over, and recently returned from India where she attended an international congress on infant feeding. It was a "marvelous" experience, she said. A published interview with her resulted in "total strangers (coming) to me with questions about breast feeding and its problems." Acosta examined several maternity care situations and found a need for improved maternity management, a problem she said exists everywhere.

Public policy also affects infant health, Acosta said. She believes that the expense of infant feeding programs which distribute formula should be partly diverted to encouraging breast feeding. Last year, the World Health Organization adopted a resolution limiting formula manufacturers' advertising practices, particularly in poor nations.

Observing human behavior in nursing mothers and their circumstances is a "wonderful opportunity for a social scientist," Acosta remarked. She studied social work at the University of North Dakota and considers it a "very good department." The daughter of Emilio Acosta, retired professor of Spanish and romance languages at UND, she lived on Hamline Street and has fond memories of growing up on the campus with her brothers.

"It's a stimulating place to grow up," she said. "I had access to very fine people who probably shaped my life in every way. I wouldn't trade those days for anything — growing and studying on campus."

Acosta married Dale Johnson, '51, at UND. Johnson is now professor of psychology at the University of Houston — Central Campus. Johnson was a yearbook and newspaper photographer. Both regarded freshman and honors English courses as important classes — and the numerous papers they've both written bear this out. They have three grown children and manage to "keep up with our friends from the old neighborhood gang through the Alumni Association," Acosta said.

SECOND NOTICE

ALUMNI DAYS 1983
May 25, 26, 27

The University's Centennial is a great time to get back to the campus, and Alumni Days is the perfect excuse! We are highlighting the dates well in advance for those of you who wish to book airline reservations early. Planned are class reunions for the Classes of 1926 to 1933. We will be featuring the 55-year reunion of the class of 1928, the 50-year reunion of the class of 1933, and the 45-year reunion of the class of 1938, as well as the reunions of the Medical School class of 1933, the Medical School class of 1938, the Law School class of 1933, the Law School class of 1938, Camp Depression residents, the mechanical engineering class of 1933, and the men's and women's Glee Clubs of 1926 to 1929.

But no matter when you attended UND, you'll find Alumni Days 1983 a nostalgic and worthwhile experience. See you there!

Twelve thousand bottles of this vintage California wine were bottled and labeled especially for Happy Harry's Bottle Shop in Grand Forks in honor of the UND Centennial. The Centennial wine was the brainchild of Harold "Hal" Gershman, '66, store owner. One dollar from the sale of each bottle will go toward a scholarship fund in the name of Gershman's father Harry to provide two scholarships annually for a music student and a business student. The label was designed by UND professor of visual arts John Rogers and bears a drawing of the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center.

Politics played part in locating of UND in Grand Forks

(Editor's Note: The University of North Dakota's 100th birthday will be celebrated on Feb. 27, 1983, a century after the signing of the authorizing legislation climaxed what some have termed an outrageous political battle. This month we republish an account of UND's birth which originally ran in the October 1975 Alumni Review.)

By DAVE VORLAND

Legend has it that in early 1883 the frontier town of Bismarck was given a choice: It could have either the University of North Dakota, or a territorial penitentiary. Bismarck took the penitentiary.

There may be a grain of truth in the story. One observer of the mind-boggling political maneuvering that took place that year in the territorial assembly wrote later, perhaps tongue in cheek, that four new public institutions in the northern half of Dakota Territory were allocated by drawing straws.

One thing is clear: The University owes its existence in great part to the political expertise of George H. Walsh, Grand Forks businessman and member of the Territorial Council.

Walsh, now recognized as the "father" of UND, took maximum advantage of the "plot" to transfer the territorial capitol from Yankton in southern Dakota to Bismarck. The result of Walsh's effort was a university at Grand Forks.

This is not to say, of course, that Grand Forks never would have received an institution of higher education without political intrigue. A nationwide fervor for higher education generated by the new industrial age had penetrated even frontier regions. The Dakota boom was at its peak in 1883, and Grand Forks was one of the most active towns in the north. Although a typically rough and ready frontier community, the town had its share of cultured and educated men and women.

Still, most Grand Forks promoters in 1883 expected no more than a normal school, or perhaps an agricultural college. Dr. William T. Collins, who would serve on the first UND Board of Regents, wrote to Walsh shortly after the opening of the 1883 legislative session to urge establishment of a normal school, and was pleasantly surprised by Walsh's reply that prospects were good for a university.

This rowdy-looking group typified the Dakota Territorial councils of the late 19th century, when UND was established as a Grand Forks political plum.

The territorial legislature had "founded" colleges prior to 1883 (the present University of South Dakota was authorized in 1862), but had never provided funding. It took north-south territorial jealousies and, above all, the capitol transfer controversy, to make higher education a reality.

The campaign to transfer the capitol from Yankton to Bismarck was led by Territorial Gov. Nehemiah Ordway in collusion with Alexander McKenzie, then sheriff of Burleigh County where Bismarck is located, and later to be known as the political "boss" of North Dakota

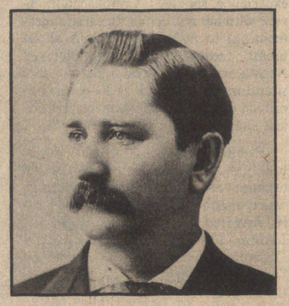
(McKenzie was also one of UND's earliest major benefactors; his gift of $500 in 1895 to the fund-raising campaign to save the new school was second only to the $1,000 donated by James J. Hill, founder of the railroad known today as the Burlington Northern.)

The reason for the move cited at the time was to place the capitol at a more central location in the territory. Historians, however, point out that the Northern Pacific Railroad wanted the capitol on its main line. When Ordway later was fired as governor by President Chester Arthur for alleged corruption, he went to work as Northern Pacific's chief Washington lobbyist. Also, both Ordway and McKenzie owned land in Bismarck. Conflicts of interest, obviously, were not considered as serious as they are today.

A key event in the history of the University took place in Grand Forks in 1882, well before the launching of the Ordway-McKenzie campaign to move the capitol. James Twamley, future UND regent and a close friend of Walsh and Ordway, was president of the Chamber of Commerce, and in that capacity brought the governor to Grand Forks to confer with civic leaders about the future distribution of institutions. According to Twamley, he suggested to Ordway on that occasion that Grand Forks would be content with the University as its share.

Ordway's strategy to win approval of moving the capitol to Bismarck was relatively simple, although the tactical implementation was exceedingly complicated. Basically, the plan involved enlisting the support of northern assembly members such as Walsh with the promise of new public institutions, and splitting the southern delegation with a variety of appeals to their self interests.

As a result, the legislature, while agreeing that the capitol should be moved from remote Yankton, could not agree on a new location. To break the stalemate, Ordway convinced the assembly to authorize a nine-person commission to make the selection.



Alexander McKenzie

Historians credit Ordway and McKenzie with using the same "divide and conquer" strategy to obtain a 5-4 commission vote for Bismarck. Southerners in the territory unsuccessfully challenged the decision in the courts, and then turned their attention to promoting separate statehood for South Dakota.

Walsh's goal of using the capitol transfer situation to obtain a university for Grand Forks was not easily accomplished, since other northern delegates were far from unanimous in their consent to the proposed division of the spoils. Besides the University, at stake for the north was an insane asylum, a penitentiary and an agricultural college.

The "drawing of straws" incident supposedly was one attempt to keep together the northern bloc. But it was Walsh's chairmanship of the appropriations committee that made the key difference, since his considerable control over money bills gave him tremendous negotiating power.

The famous "blank bill" episode finally locked up the placement of UND at Grand Forks. As historian Louis Geiger described it:

Fearing that his still restive northern colleagues might yet walk off with the prize, he hastily introduced into the legislative hopper some blank sheets of paper inscribed "A Bill for an Act Locating the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, N.D., and Providing for the Government thereto." In the two days required for first and second readings, which were by title only, Walsh prepared a bill modeled on the University of Wisconsin act and substituted it for the dummy when it was routinely referred to his appropriations committee.

As he put it: "No one would be any wiser, and no harm would be done by anyone, and I would get my bill ahead of Fargo or Jamestown, which I succeeded in doing. The Jamestown member was very much disappointed."

The bill moved swiftly through the Legislature and was signed by Ordway on Feb. 27, 1883. It was the first official use of the term "North Dakota." Companion bills authorized $30,000 in bonds to construct a building; $1,000 for apparatus; $600 for fuel, light and janitor service; $1,000 for incidental expenses; $400 for improvement of grounds; and a maximum of $5,000 a year for salaries.

Thus the University was born in the heat of politics. But, fortunately for higher education in North Dakota, Walsh and the early leaders of the University took steps to keep the University above politics. As former President George Starcher said in an address marking the UND's 75th anniversary:

"With only a few exceptions this precedent (of separating the University from politics) has not been violated since. Our founders understood that education which truly serves the purposes of a free society can prosper only in an atmosphere of freedom, that governing boards must be composed of outstanding laymen, men with perception and the determination to leave the details of educational policy to the faculty and its administrative leaders."

George Walsh

Cartoon series depicts notable alumni, faculty

A series of editorial cartoons featuring University of North Dakota alumni and faculty who have made names for themselves and for the state is now running weekly in North Dakota newspapers as part of the Centennial observance.

The cartoons, drawn by Grand Forks artist Bill Julison, are titled "Notable Nodaks" and are intended for the exclusive use of weekly newspapers (the entire series will appear later in the Alumni Review).

According to information provided to weekly newspaper editors by UND's Office of University Relations, "each cartoon will feature a person who has put UND and North Dakota 'on the map' and will give readers an unusual glimpse into their state's history." Funded by the UND Foundation, the cartoons are being provided to editors "camera ready." Response so far has been excellent.

"Notable Nodaks" included in the series are explorer Vilhjalmur Stafansson, aviator Carl Ben Eielson, international businessman and UND benefactor Chester Fritz, hockey coach Cliff Purpur, businessman and benefactor Ken Hyslop, playwright Maxwell Anderson, balloonist Maxie Anderson, Olympic athlete Fritz Pollard, politician William Lander, historian Elwyn Robinson, UND founder George Walsh, insurance executive Arley Bjella, UND President Thomas J. Clifford, state geologist Wilson Laird, lignite pioneer Earle Babcock, Life magazine editor Edward K. Thompson, General David Jones, medical educator Harley French, federal Judge Ronald Davies, nutrition expert Dorothy Revell, ceramic artist Margaret Cable, Non-Partisan League founder Lynn Frazier, businessman John Hancock, black journalist Era Bell Thompson, politician Fred Aandahl and musician Paul Yoder.

It was a great way to launch a Centennial.

About 800 people—North Dakota legislators, elected and and appointed state officials, state Supreme Court justices, alumni and friends—turned out in Bismarck Jan. 13 to wish the University of North Dakota a happy 100th birthday.

The state officials were special guests of the UND Alumni Association at the event, which featured talks by President Thomas J. Clifford, Gov. Allen Olson, Alumni Association president Merlin Dewing and Centennial Campaign National Chairman Arley Bjella.

The first of more than 60 such birthday parties planned nationwide, the Bismarck gathering also gave some former Varsity Bards a chance to join their latter-day counterparts in song. The premier of the Foundation's new film, "University of North Dakota: The New Century," met with an enthusiastic response.

President Clifford, who was greeted by a standing round of applause, ended his remarks with the following statement: "Who can calculate the value of a caring community, a vibrant spirit of teaching and learning, a coming of age in an atmosphere of truth and beauty that entices young people to embrace them? Who can put a price on the value of younger and older people sharing dreams, working together for the less fortunate, planning a better world, espousing great causes with courage and integrity? Whatever the challenges of the next century, we need not fear them. We accept them with a faith and a vision that would not be denied in 1883, not then, now now, not ever."

A crowd of 800 gathered.

Centennial flavor will spice 1983 Alumni Days, Homecoming

Special Centennial editions of two popular, traditional alumni events are in the works at the University of North Dakota. And if you are planning to return to campus during this 100th anniversary year, you'll want to keep Alumni Days May 25-27 and Homecoming '83 Oct. 6-9 in mind.

Both Alumni Days and Homecoming will feature expanded schedules to mark the Centennial, with more special reunions, events and entertainment planned than in years past.

The featured reunions for Alumni Days will be 45-, 50- and 55-year reunions of the Classes of 1938, 1933 and 1928, but all other classes from 1923 through 1933 will be reuniting as well during the three-day affair in May.

Other reunions planned for Alumni Days include the School of Medicine and the School of Law Classes of 1933 and 1938, a Camp Depression reunion and a gathering of the mechanical engineering Class of 1933.

Another special feature will be the rebirth of the May Fete, which will be performed for the first time since the annual production ended in 1927. The 1983 performance of the May Fete will be given by the North Dakota Ballet Company in the Chester Fritz Auditorium on Wednesday, May 25.

Outstanding alumni will be honored the evening of Thursday, May 26, at the traditional Sioux Awards banquet at the Westward Ho Motel. As a Centennial addition to the Alumni Days agenda, however, a dance will be held following the Sioux Awards presentations.

Alumni Days in May is a tempting time to return to campus, as spring bursts across the prairie. But if you prefer, think golden leaves, marching bands and football.

And think Homecoming 1983.

A special feature of Homecoming this fall will be the UND Centennial Marathon. This run will be open to alumni, students and members of the community. The marathon has been tentatively organized as a six- and 10-kilometer run.

Sioux Athletic Hall of Fame induction ceremonies will be part of the Homecoming Lettermen's breakfast, and, of course, the Sioux Awards will be presented at a banquet.

A host of special reunions are planned for Homecoming as well. All-alumni reunions will be held for the Schools of Law and Medicine as well as the journalism, aviation and music departments.

There will be reunions for Varsity Bards and the University Band. Also scheduled are a Camp Wheeler 40th anniversary reunion and a KFJM 60th anniversary reunion. And members of that illustrious group known as the Golden Feather will also reunite during Homecoming '83.

Another Homecoming event will be the dedication of the new Center for Aerospace Sciences building in a ceremony on Saturday, Oct. 8, at the building on the west edge of campus.

An open house will be held at the one remaining tin hut, which will be refurbished for the occasion. But the huts have served their purpose, and after this year that last lonely one will also come down.

For more information on these and many other activities planned for Alumni Days or Homecoming, contact the UND Alumni Office at Box 8157, University Station, Grand Forks, N.D. 58202, phone (701) 777-2611.

Upcoming Birthday Parties

Join us at the UND Centennial party to be held in your area. This is your opportunity to celebrate UND's 100th birthday with local alumni and friends. Come and renew old acquaintances, make new friends, sing a UND song, cheer for your alma mater and view the new professionally produced Centennial film about UND, "University of North Dakota: The New Century." Don't miss the fun! Mark your calendar and make reservations today for one of these upcoming UND Centennial Celebrations:

Eugene, Ore.

The Centennial party in Eugene will be held on Thursday, March 10, at the Eugene Hilton Hotel and City Conference Center, 66 E. 6th Ave., Eugene. The social hour (no-host bar) will begin at 6 p.m., with dinner ($13 per person) served at 7 p.m.

John and Marcia Jarrett are serving as arrangements and reservations charimen for the event. For reservations and more information, contact the Jarretts at 727 Spyglass, Eugene, Ore. 97401, or phone (503) 686-0678.

The Eugene Hilton is offering a special rate of $30 single occupancy, $40 double occupancy and $8 for an additional person to members of our UND alumni family wishing to stay overnight or even over the weekend. Reservations may be telephoned to the Eugene Hilton at 342-2000 or toll-free within Oregon 800-452-8017. To receive this special rate, indicate that you are part of the UND group, and make your reservations by Wednesday, Feb. 16.

Portland, Ore.

UND alumni and friends in Portland will celebrate the University's Centennial on Friday, March 11, at the Cosmopolitan Hotel, 1013 Northeast Union, Portland. The social hour (no-host bar) will begin at 6:30 p.m. with dinner ($10.50 per person) served at 7:30 p.m.

Chairman for the reunion is Ted Rolle. For additional information and reservations, contact Ted at 6346 N. Williams Ave., Portland, Ore. 97217, or phone (503) 238-5016 or (503) 242-0516.

Seattle/Tacoma, Wash.

Join us on Saturday, March 12, at the Greenwood Inn, 625 116th Northeast, Bellevue, Wash., for the Seattle/Tacoma UND Centennial celebration. The social hour (no-host bar) will begin at 6:30 p.m. with dinner ($16 per person) served at 7:30 p.m.

Gary and Rosemary Peterson are serving as arrangments and reservations chairmen for the event. For reservations and more information, contact the Petersons at 1376 92nd Ave. NE, Kirkland, Wash. 98033, or phone (206) 823-2823 or (206) 483-9090.

Marco Island, Fla.

Plan now to attend the Marco Island UND Centennial birthday party Saturday, March 12, at Shipp's Landing, 1090 South Collier Blvd., Marco Island, Fla. The social hour (no-host bar) will begin at 6 p.m. with dinner ($15 per person) served at 7 p.m.

Grad adds topping Mount McKinley to challenges of nature

By JOHN VANVIG

Kruse, a 1977 graduate of the University of North Dakota, was perched on the summit of Mount McKinley, gazing down on lesser peaks through the cold, clear air at 20,320 feet — the highest point on the continent.

Kruse and three other men, including Gary Dunford, '78, had begun their assault on McKinley 11 days earlier after chartering a plane to Kahiltna Glacier, 7,000 feet up the mountainside. Only Kruse and one of the others made it all the way to the top, however; Dunford was forced to descend to the base camp with the fourth climber, who had contracted respiratory problems due to the thin, high-altitude air.

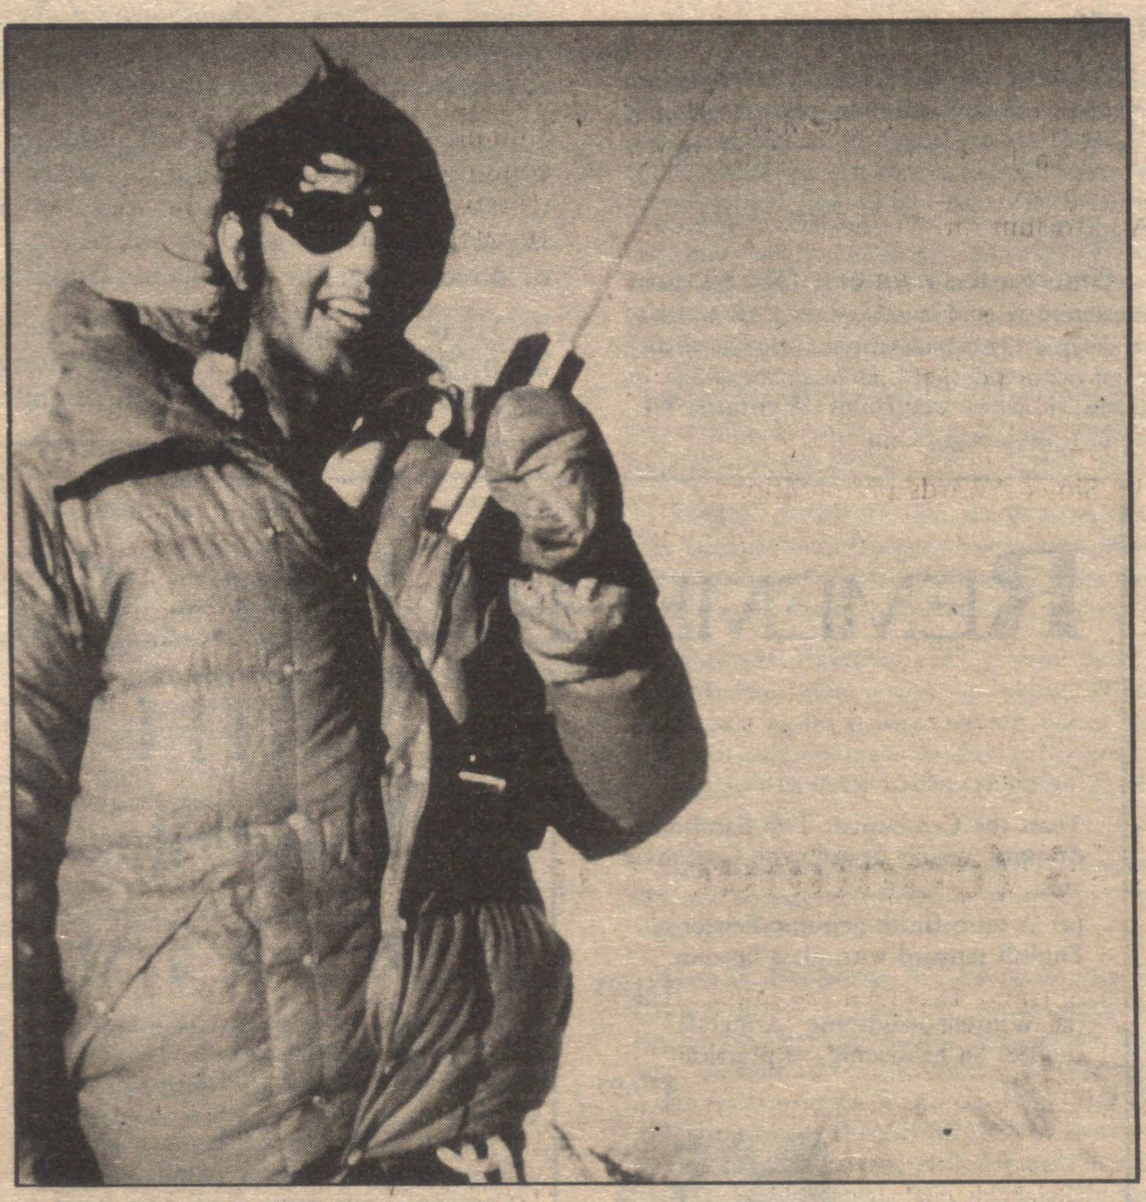
The 11-day climb was dangerous and difficult, Kruse said, but well worth the effort.

"We could see hundreds of peaks, and by the time we actually got to the summit we were so far up it felt as if we were in an airplane," he told a newspaper reporter in his home town of Rochester, Minn.

Descending from McKinley's summit took Kruse and his companion only two days, compared to the 11 it required to climb up. But, as Kruse wrote later, coming down is perilous, too:

"The descent is always more dangerous, as you have reached your goal and you have let your guard down. The altitude also clouds your thinking."

It was while coming down that he faced the most dangerous part of the expedition, Kruse said. The ice clamp on the sole of one of his boots slipped on an ice slope and he began to fall, but he was able to stop himself with his ice axe.



Steve Kruse, '77, stands above the rest of the continent at the summit of Mount McKinley in Alaska, the highest point in North America.

Kruse has lived in Alaska for nearly five years, working as a chemical engineer for Arco Alaska Inc. petroleum operations at Prudhoe Bay on the state's North Slope.

His work schedule requires Kruse to commute some 800 miles by airplane for a week at a time at Prudhoe, where he puts in 12-hour shifts working on new equipment to enhance oil production, improving existing processes and providing technical support for day-to-day operations.

"We work seven 12-hour shifts, but then get seven days off to enjoy Alaska," he said. "Being a chemical engineer, you usually only get two weeks off a year — something I didn't really consider while at UND. But this job, while you work hard, does give you time to play hard and see Alaska."

Kruse has been playing hard for some time. In addition to scaling North America's loftiest peak, he has floated down the Yukon River and hiked the Chilkoot pass, retracing routes taken by miners in the Gold Rush of 1898. He has also climbed mountains in Washington state and Mexico, as well as Mounts Redoubt, Silverthrone and Wrangell in Alaska. Now he has others in mind.

"There are a lot of unnamed peaks here which rise 16,000 to 17,000 feet we can try," he said. He also hopes to attempt an ascent on some of South America's 23,000-plus peaks within a year or two.

And after that?

"I hope to go to the Himalayas in Nepal next," Kruse said. "In the meantime, we're having a great back-country ski season."

Remember when

By SUSAN BERG

February 1933

The University celebrated its golden anniversary with a watchful eye on finances. The Founder's Day festivities included the Carney song contest, several luncheons and the basketball game between the Sioux and the Ag College (now NDSU).

Margaret Thompson was selected as Golden Anniversary Queen.

The Minnesota Gophers, the first Big 10 team ever to play in Grand Forks, defeated the fledgling Sioux hockey team in two games.

Marian Muehl, president of the junior class, and Robert Babcock, prom manager, were the Junior Prom leaders.

The Dakota Student reflected the uproar over the House Appropriations Committee suggestions to cut University appropriations by 44 percent, eliminating the Graduate School and summer sessions.

Enrollment for second semester classes totaled 831.

February 1953

Elvera McGinley was elected Queen Aurora of the King Kold Karnival. Tau Kappa Epsilon won the snow sculpture contest with a representation of a leering, demonic face.

The Carney Song contest died a slow death due to a lack of "choragi" candidates and support.

February 1963

The new University attendance policy took effect. While students were expected to attend classes, individual instructors set up their own attendance requirements and had the exclusive right to excuse students from classes.

Becky Raveling was elected Queen Aurora of the King Kold Karnival. The carnival suffered from an acute lack of snow and substituted broomball competitions for the traditional ice sculpture contest.

February 1973

The student body totaled 7,993.

The 19-year-old drinking age bill passed the State House of Representatives and Senate, to the delight of UND students. Gov. Art Link then vetoed the bill and discovered the Capitol lawn littered with beer bottles the following day.

Christy's latest series, 11 paintings and six drawings of realistic North Dakota Badlands scenes, is currently touring the state's larger cities under the auspices of the North Dakota Gallery Association. The exhibit recently ended a three-week run at the North Dakota Museum of Art at the University of North Dakota.

"I've always painted North Dakota scenes," Christy said, "although not necessarily realistic landscapes. Ever since I was in school, all my works have had some kind of North Dakota figure in them."

He said he was a bit apprehensive about showing his work at UND, where former instructors would be on hand to critique it.

"There's still a feeling of being judged as a student," Christy said. "And for an artist, there's always a fear of rejection."

But he added that those worries were overshadowed by a desire to let fellow North Dakotans see his work.

"From my standpoint as an artist, it's not so much where I show from a status kind of thing; it's getting my work in front of the public."

Thousands to be at U in March for national hockey tournament

By LEE BOHNET

Media coverage of the 36th annual National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division I Hockey championships March 24-26 at the University of North Dakota will be extensive as the nation's finest collegiate teams strive for the top prize in college hockey.

And according to Carl Miller, UND athletic director, the influx of up to 175 reporters, broadcasters and support people will be only the tip of the iceberg.

"We expect over 5,000 people coming into our city and staying four or five days," Miller said. "This will bring about $4 million into the local economy."

He added that the 6,000-seat UND Winter Sports Center will be packed with fans and media people. Tournament tickets were sold out by last summer, when a lottery was held to allocate them fairly. Each of the four schools who make it to the final rounds at UND, however, will receive a bloc of 500 tickets.

The battle is close this year in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association (WCHA), but Sioux Coach Gino Gasparini and his team reportedly have a good shot at a berth in the final rounds to be played on their home ice, hoping for their third championship in four years and the fifth in UND history.

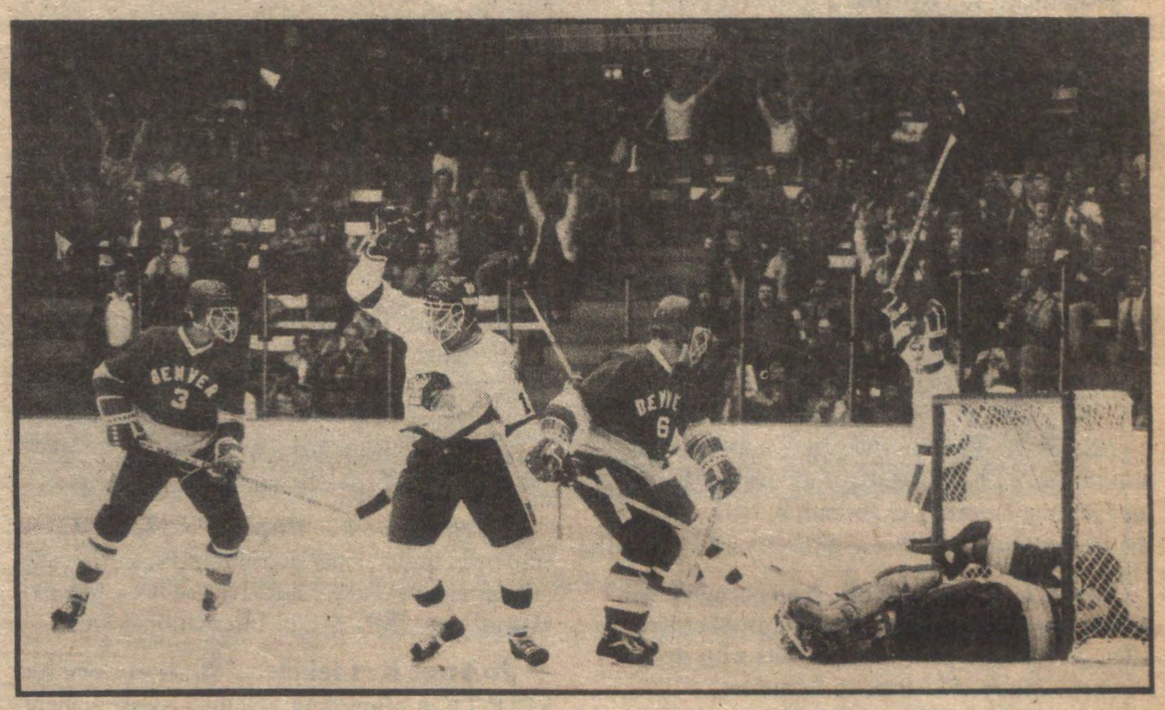
It would be a sweet victory, achieved at home with the world watching.

Sportswriters from such prestigious newspapers as the New York Times, Boston Globe, Chicago Tribune and Minneapolis Star and Tribune will staff the tournament, as will most of the daily newspapers which cover WCHA schools. Many North Dakota dailies have already requested press credentials.

Sports Illustrated magazine, which sent a writer to campus last fall to write a hockey story, also will be represented, along with several other national magazines.

Additionally, tournament games will be televised by the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network (ESPN), a nationwide cable sports television network. Locally, KTHI-TV of Fargo, N.D., will broadcast the semifinal and final rounds, and expects to feed the action to several other television stations. For time and channel of the broadcasts in your area, check your local television listings.

Radio coverage of the tournament will also be extensive, as all four competing schools are expected to have one and possibly two stations at UND.



UND senior Bryan Jensen exults after penetrating the University of Denver defense to score in a 7-2 victory for the Sioux. If the Sioux keep up their winning ways, UND hockey fans nationwide will have a chance to see them in action on home ice when the University hosts the NCAA Division I hockey tournament finals March 24-26.

"Because the tournament games will be on a national cable television network and because we have some of the nation's largest and most widely read newspapers coming to the tournament and many radio stations broadcasting the games," Miller said, "UND and North Dakota will get national publicity that money couldn't buy."

And if the Sioux get into the final rounds of the tournament, alumni around the country will have a rare chance to once again watch a home hockey game — at home.

News briefs

Mortimer Adler, one of the most important philosophers of this century, will receive an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree from the University of North Dakota this month.

Adler will receive the degree at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 23, at the UND Hyslop Sports Center, when he delivers the Centennial convocation for the Centennial Academic Symposium.

As chairman of the board of editors for Encyclopaedia Britannica and a co-founder of the nationwide Great Books program, Adler has had a major influence on contemporary thought. His book "Six Great Ideas" was the subject of a recent series on public television with Bill Moyers.

At the Feb. 23 convocation, Adler will deliver an address titled "The Twentieth Century University." It is one of 11 symposium sessions scheduled for Feb. 22-25. More information on the UND Centennial Academic Symposium is available from the UND Office of University Relations, Box 8143, University Station, Grand Forks, N.D. 58202.

Seven world-famous writers, including a Russian exile, three Pulitzer Prize winners and a Nobel laureate for literature, will be on campus next month for the 14th annual University of North Dakota Writers Conference.

The conference, scheduled for March 21-25, will include the traditional readings by the writers themselves and "open mike" panel discussions. But conference coordinator John Little says this year's conference will offer a couple of new wrinkles: a session in which aspiring writers can give impromptu readings of their own works and two writing workshops in poetry and fiction.

Those workshops are open to anyone planning to attend, Little said. Poets should submit up to five poems to him at the UND English department before March 1; the works of five poets will be selected for discussion at the workshop. Fiction writers should submit one short story by March 1, with three chosen for workshop discussion.

Writers who have said they will attend are Joseph Brodsky, Carolyn Forche, Czeslaw Milosz, James Alan McPherson, Bobbie Ann Mason, Richard Howard and James Merrill.
