Lawyer, volunteer, doctor are spring Sioux Award recipients

Haugen, '26, '27

Boynton (Chase), '46

Three Sioux Awards, the University of North Dakota Alumni Association's foremost recognition of achievement and service, will be presented to outstanding UND alumni during Alumni Days Wednesday through Friday, May 21-23, in Grand Forks.

This year's honored alumni are John Hjellum, '34, retired lawyer living in Jamestown, N.D.; Marjorie Boynton (Chase), '46, active in numerous community and political organizations in Ukiah, Calif.; and Dr. Clifford Haugen, '26, '27, longtime physician in Larimore, N.D.

The awards will be presented at the traditional Alumni Days

Banquet at the Westward Ho at 6:30 p.m., Thursday, May 22. Tickets are $14 each and may be purchased by writing to the UND Alumni Association, Box 8157 University Station, Grand Forks, ND 58202.

Although "retired," Hjellum still shows up for work as the senior partner in the law firm Hjellum, Weiss, Nerison, Jukkala, Wright & Paulson in Jamestown, N.D. Hjellum has practiced law in North Dakota for 50 years. He also is one of 500 worldwide members of the International Academy of Trial Lawyers.

Hjellum is active in numerous professional and community organizations. He is a member of the International and American bar associations as well as Stutsman County, North Dakota and 4th Judicial District. He has served as president of the county, state and district bars.

For 22 years, Hjellum was a board member of the Soo Line Railroad; for 11 years, he was the director of the Jamestown National Bank. Hjellum now serves as director of the Northern Synthetic Fuels Corp.

Maintaining an active interest in education, Hjellum was a longtime member of the UND law school improvement and liaison committees, a member of the Jamestown school board, a trustee of Jamestown College and president of the Board of

Hjellum, '34

Trustees of the North Dakota Independent College Fund.

In addition to several honorary and professional memberships, Hjellum is a member of the Masons, Lions, American Legion, VFW, Jamestown Chamber of Commerce and the Red Cross. He is listed in Who's Who in America and Who's Who in American Law.

ALUMNI REVIEW

Fine Arts College is at creative core of U

By DAVID VORLAND

The University of North Dakota is best known for turning out business executives, lawyers, doctors, teachers, engineers and other professionals.

But over the years — and especially in the past 15 — UND also has produced musicians, painters, sculptors, actors, playwrights and other practitioners of the "fine arts" (i.e., those creative disciplines for which "aesthetic purposes are primary and uppermost").

Talented young people with an artistic bent have always been able to get a start at the University of North Dakota. But on July 1, 1971, preparing for a career in the visual arts, theatre arts and music became easier when UND consolidated these programs into a College of Fine Arts.

A not unimportant motive at the time was that the University was about to construct the privately funded Edmond Hughes Fine Arts Center, says Dr. Bruce Jacobsen, dean of the College. The architecturally distinctive building opened in 1974 on the banks of the English Coulee.

However, it wasn't just a matter of relocating under one roof a previously scattered group of faculty and students. In fact, even today the theatre arts department remains across the Coulee in Burtness Theatre and Chandler Hall.

The founding of the College, Jacobsen says, reflects the willingness of the University to give more than lip service to its century old mission of providing a broad general education to all of its students, no matter what their eventual specialty. The liberal and fine arts at UND are seen as the central core, surrounded by the professional and specialized programs.

The support of the fine arts among UND administrators, and, even more critically, among faculty from other disciplines, goes beyond the often expressed platitudes, Jacobsen says. For example, the University community has stood solidly behind the College's curriculum innovations and its drive to meet very tough national accreditation standards in its mainline programs.

With a somewhat unique academic background — combining business with the (see PROFESSORS/PERFORMERS, page 6)

Report from campus

Faculty Enhancement — A Top Priority

There is little question, in my opinion, about who is the most irreplaceable individual in the educational system — the outstanding classroom teacher. We all have benefited from experiences with an outstanding teacher, that rare person who, with sensitivity and patience, challenges, motivates and encourages, always adhering to the highest standards of academic excellence.

The late Elwyn Robinson, professor emeritus of history, was one such person and UND, in its 100-plus years, has been blessed with many dedicated and talented faculty members like him. They are the key to the success of any institution of learning.

The Board of the UND Foundation is giving top priority to securing and retaining the strongest possible faculty for UND. Academic excellence is strengthened when the likes of an Elwyn Robinson is attracted to the campus and spends several decades in research and writing and, most importantly, relating with students. An academic leader may set standards that go well beyond a particular discipline, which is a beneficial influence for the entire institution.

We are encouraging alumni and friends to establish endowments for the support of academic chairs. I am pleased to report that a number of these arrangements have been formalized in recent months. Completely funding a full academic position is out of reach for most donors, but an endowment which can partially fund a position may well be attainable for a large number of our alumni. An endowment that may supplement an annual salary can be very important in helping UND to attract or retain an outstanding teacher.

Our goal is to have a large number of named endowments established within the UND Foundation to support outstanding teaching in every academic discipline. If this idea is of interest to you, please get in touch with me. Deferred gift arrangements are often used to establish an endowment. A simple provision in one's will can establish a named endowment. The benefit to UND and future generations of students are significant and far-reaching. The donors gain a great amount of personal satisfaction knowing they are doing something very important for their University.

How Are We Doing?

We at the Alumni Association continually analyze and critique our programs for effectiveness and improvement. The goals outlined by the first organization of UND alumni in the late 1800s haven't changed. As stated in the early minutes and formalized in the Articles of Incorporation in 1915, this organization exists simply to foster friendships and relationships between classmates, to keep alumni informed and involved in happenings at their University, and to further the growth and development of the University of North Dakota.

We work very hard to create a climate which encourages both alumni involvement and pride in their University.

The large and enthusiastic turnouts at our on- and off-campus alumni events have convinced us that the work done by our staff and reunion chairmen has been well worthwhile. Thanks, too, for the many nice comments we receive about the Alumni Review. Alumni loyalty exhibited by the increasing participation in the UND Foundation giving programs is gratifying. For the staff, our challenge is always to do better. We take your comments and suggestions seriously. Please let us know your ideas on how the UND Alumni Association can better serve the members of our alumni family and the University of North Dakota.

It Is Getting Better Every Year

Already we are making plans for the 1987 UND Alumni Imperial Palace Las Vegas Weekend during the long Presidents' Day weekend in February. This year, alumni attended from all across the nation. A special thank you to Ralph and Betty Engelstad for hosting the delightful and very special Saturday evening party.

There Is Still Time

Reservations may still be made for the UND alumni Rhone River Cruise, June 24-July 7. This is guaranteed to be a most enjoyable experience. Please contact our office for information.

Alumni Days, May 21-23, is going to be a great success. If you are a member of one of the reunion classes or were here during the 1920s and 1930s, don't miss the opportunity to again be on the banks of the English Coulee in the springtime.

Living' it up in Las Vegas

A healthy cross section of University of North Dakota alumni from the East and West Coasts and Canada attended the sixth annual UND Alumni Imperial Palace Las Vegas Weekend during Presidents' Day Weekend Feb. 14-17.

Ralph and Betty Engelstad, owners of the Imperial Palace, went to great lengths to see that the mood was right. The banquet and entertainment rooms were decorated using UND as the theme with green and white colors.

Next year's reunion is already being planned so mark your calendar to spend Presidents' Day Weekend next February in Las Vegas.

By SUE BERG

Paul Lester, '72, was a Grand Forks television sales executive who dreamed of being a riverboat captain.

His dream now is a boon for Grand Forks and for alumni of the University of North Dakota.

Lester is the captain of the Grand Forks riverboat, Dakota Queen, whose schedule includes a special sailing May 22 for Alumni Days.

The 80-foot red-and-white riverboat begins sailing May 9 and will sail until the Red River freezes. It can carry 150 passengers from its dock near the Sorlie Bridge (downtown) to the Myra Museum near Lincoln Park where it turns around. It cost $350,000 to build, plus another $50,000 for developing the dock site and the ticket office.

The idea to establish a riverboat began in 1982 as the winning entry in a Grand Forks promotional contest sponsored by the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau. Lester was intrigued by the idea and offered to help.

"Grand Forks had a void in summer entertainment," Lester said. "With my experience in marketing, I thought it was a great project to fill that void."

He approached CVB executive secretary Dan Quandt with his support.

"We were excited to have private enterprise involved in this project," Quandt said. "From the beginning, we've had amazing support from the community. There was a real enthusiasm to get a riverboat established in Grand Forks."

With a pledge for $60,000 "seed" money from the Red River Valley Transportation Museum and Steamboat Foundation, Lester began to fulfill his dream of being a riverboat captain.

"I've always wanted to wear a white captain's uniform with gold bars," Lester said. "Cruising along the Red River reminds me of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn."

Lester is more than captain—he is president of Dakota Queen. He had the boat built by a company in Wisconsin and it was delivered to Grand Forks in June 1985. Lester attended a pilot's school in Chicago and passed an exam given by the U.S. Coast Guard. He now holds a federal pilot's license.

Actually, Lester holds another pilot's license to fly his twin-engine airplane. Lester learned to fly while a journalism student at UND.

"The aviation background helped a lot in learning how to handle the twin engines of the riverboat," Lester said. "It helped to know how to use the engines for turning right or left, for example."

The riverboat was one of Lester's many projects, according to his wife, Renae M. (Sherwin), '72. A loan officer at Metropolitan Federal in Grand Forks, Lester admitted she was a little skeptical of the idea.

"Paul was so excited about it," Lester said. "It was his dream, and he really wanted to do it." After she discovered that the community was behind the project, she joined in the enthusiasm. "Now, I'm pretty excited about it. We love riding on the riverboat," she said.

The Lester's have two young children who accompany their mother often on the riverboat.

"Paul is on the riverboat so much during the summer that we go for rides just to see him," Renae Lester said, laughing.

The riverboat makes three sailings each day: at lunch, during the afternoon, and a dinner cruise, featuring prime rib dinners. Gambling and alcohol are available except on Sundays.

Grand Forks has invested time and effort into the riverbanks, improving the appearance. The next phase of the riverboat project will add carriage rides.

"The river is very beautiful in its natural state," Lester said. "Sailing on it has been tremendous fun."

UND days ALUMNI

The University of North Dakota may have changed somewhat since you last roamed its campus. But its beauty is still evident in the familiar landmarks and new facilities which you may tour during Alumni Days, May 21-23.

This is the time to reacquaint yourself with classmates from years gone by. Make plans now to attend the three days of exciting activities we've planned for you and other special alumni and friends.

THE NEWLY OPENED SWANSON HALL is reunion headquarters. This attractive building houses over 200 UND students during the academic year and is conveniently located adjacent to Memorial Student Union where all Alumni Days meals will be served. Swanson Hall has accommodations for the disabled and is utilized as a full-service convention facility when school is not in session.

SPECIAL CLASS REUNIONS will feature the 1926, 1931 and 1936 UND graduating years. Also, gatherings are being planned to reunite 50-year engineering, law and med school graduates. Watch the Alumni Review for further developments, or make your reservations now to ensure your place at the alumni festivities!

- MAY 21
- 1:00 p.m. Begin room registration and check in — Swanson Hall
Alumni Office Registration and Information desk opens — Swanson Hall. Early arrivals may tour the campus on their own, or schedule our courtesy cars for trips downtown or to the shopping malls.
- 3:00-5:00 p.m. Open House — J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center
 3:00-5:00 p.m. Kappa Alpha Theta 75th year reunion. Open house at 2500 University Ave.
 5:30 p.m. Reunion Mixer — Dakota Lounge, Second Floor of the Memorial Union
 6:00 p.m. Get Reacquainted Dinner — Ballroom, Second Floor of the Memorial Union
- MAY 22
- 7:00-9:00 a.m. Breakfast available in the Centennial Dining Room — Lower Level of the Memorial Union
 7:30-9:00 a.m. Engineering Dept. 50th year reunion — Class of 1936 breakfast in the Sioux Room, Second Floor of the Memorial Union (All engineering graduates and friends welcome)
Law School 50th year reunion — Class of 1936 breakfast in the Red River Valley Room, Second Floor of the Memorial Union. (All law school graduates and friends welcome)
 8:00 a.m. Alumni Office Registration and Information Desk Opens — Swanson Hall
 9:00 a.m. CULTURAL TOUR of the UND Campus.
 Tour begins with a special musical performance by Maria Williams, current UND student and nationally recognized singer, performing live at the Chester Fritz Auditorium.
 Next stop includes a special showing of pottery created by students of UND professor Margaret Cable (deceased) at the Hughes Fine Arts Center
 Along the bus route, tour guides will also point out the Fraternity and Sorority Row, as well as the Chester Fritz Library.
- 12:15 p.m. DAKOTA QUEEN RIVERBOAT LUNCHEON CRUISE, on the Red River of the North. Transportation to the banks of the loading dock leaves the driveway of the Memorial Union at 12:15. Cruise begins at 12:30 p.m.
- 2:00 p.m. Class Pictures — on the Red River banks near the Dakota Queen Riverboat.
 3:00 p.m. President's Reception with UND President Tom Clifford at his home on Yale Drive.
 6:00-7:00 p.m. Kappa Alpha Theta 75th year reunion social, Westward Ho.
 8:30 p.m. Alumni Days Awards Banquet (8:30 p.m. social hour; 7:30 p.m. dinner followed by program) at the Westward Ho
- MAY 23
- 7:00-9:00 a.m. Breakfast available in the Centennial Dining Room, Lower Level of the Memorial Union
 7:30 a.m.-9 a.m. Medical School 50th year reunion — Class of 1936 breakfast in the Red River Valley Room, Second Floor of the Memorial Union. (All medical school graduates and friends welcome)
Special program and atmosphere presentation — Center for Aerospace Sciences
 9:30 a.m. Tours available upon request to Hyslop Sports Center, Chester Fritz Library, Winter Sports Center, Energy Resource Center and other buildings of your choosing.
 11 a.m. President's Farewell Buffet — Ballroom, Second Floor of the Memorial Union

Wessman: Professor/politician

Henry C. "Bud" Wessman is a University of North Dakota faculty member who wears at least two hats.

On the one hand, for the past 19 years he has chaired the Department of Physical Therapy in the School of Medicine, one of UND's most rigorous, and selective, undergraduate programs. Physical therapy is an "allied health" profession involving the treatment of many types of disabilities with regulated exercise and other means.

On the other hand, as mayor of Grand Forks and a former state legislator, he leads a highly visible and occasionally controversial life as one of the most quotable local politicians.

Wessman, of course, has no difficulty in setting priorities: His University responsibilities come first. "As far as I am concerned," he says, "the mayor's office is an add on, part-time task."

Wessman's political opponents no longer bother asking whether his dual life is shortchanging UND. The time he devotes to the job is meticulously documented. More importantly, the record of the Physical Therapy Department speaks for itself.

Wessman came to UND in 1967 from the University of Minnesota with the mandate to further develop what amounted to a pre-physical therapy program in the College of Arts and Sciences. Although students eventually received a UND degree, they were required to transfer to other schools to complete their actual PT training.

Under Wessman's direction, the degree was moved to the School of Medicine and a two-year professional curriculum was developed for students selected at the end of the sophomore year. In 1970, the first group of students who had completed their training at UND received the B.S. in Physical Therapy.

Altogether, some 448 physical therapists have received the UND degree. Some seven of every ten physical therapists who practice in North Dakota today are UND graduates.

Even more remarkable is the fact that in nearly two decades, just six students have dropped out. Those six quit due to personal, not academic, reasons, Wessman says.

Obviously, the department's admissions process is working. The highly competitive PT program receives more than a thousand inquiries annually from interested students. Fewer than 100 — those who have completed pre-PT coursework — are allowed to apply and interview for the 40 available spots.

Not that all unsuccessful candidates leave UND in disgust. The vast majority of freshmen who come to UND with an interest in PT leave with a degree four years later. After all, UND does offer 129 other fields of study. Some students find another career path on their own. Others are counseled to consider another field that may not depend as much upon a foundation of scientific knowledge.

Among qualities Wessman seeks in prospective physical therapists is intellectual competence, the ability to communicate with and motivate people, an enjoyment of the work itself, and an ability to withstand the strenuous physical demands of the job.

These are characteristics which no doubt have led to his own success in the academic environment and have not hurt him in the world of politics.

Soft-spoken, yet resolute and precise, Wessman's relaxed manner belies the energy of an individual who runs a University academic department with the equivalent of five and a half faculty members and 80 students, while holding the mayoral reins of a city of 45,000.

Wessman has been mayor for six years. Besides serving a term in the legislature, he also has taken on such tasks as serving on a U.S. Congressional committee on the Garrison Diversion Project.

The news media frequently call upon him for comments on statewide issues, and this has helped give him name recognition. Then too, Wessman admits a genuine fascination with the political arena. At various junctures, he has proffered his candidacy unsuccessfully for the Republican nomination for governor, U.S. senator and congressman.

As for future political ambitions, Wessman isn't saying much. He has two years to go on his second term as mayor. He also tends to worry about the tendency of many these days to place image over performance in evaluating their elected public servants.

Wessman prefers to talk about physical therapy. The department is moving to modernized quarters, and a new master's degree in PT is on the drawing board. Another continuing, vital effort is maintaining UND affiliations with clinical training sites around the country. (currently 74).

With such ambitious goals in mind, Wessman has recently called on the PT graduates to assist in the future development of the department by contributing to the "Physical Therapy Salute to Excellence Campaign." The response from this close-knit group of alumni has been excellent.

'Boots' of two varieties figured in Bolivian's career in aviation

By SUE BERG

In 1963, Oswaldo Villarroel was a high school student playing for Bolivia's national soccer team. One day, Villarroel made a casual remark to an American friend that someday he wanted to study aviation administration.

Villarroel, '73, well remembers that remark because it brought him to the other end of the world to become one of the first graduates of the fledgling aviation administration program at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks.

Now assistant administrator of general operations for Lloyd Aero Boliviano, Villarroel visited in February with his American friend in Grand Forks and the UND campus.

The friend is W. Lloyd "Boots" Richmond Jr., '59. An engineer, Richmond was working in Bolivia for an American engineering firm and engaged to Blanca (Humerez), when he met Villarroel. Villarroel's brother, Herman, is married to Blanca's sister, Olga.

"Oswaldo was a professional soccer player at the time," Richmond recalled, "and he was the youngest member of the team, I believe."

The engineer remembered Villarroel's desire to study aviation administration. In 1969, Richmond learned about UND's new aviation administration program.

"Boots fired off a letter to me about the program, and invited me to check it out," Villarroel said. "Then he sponsored me in a residency so that I could attend UND."

The English language didn't bother Villarroel — but the weather did.

Villarroel's hometown, Cochabamba, has "beautiful weather," Richmond described.

"The temperature hovers between 50 degrees and 75 degrees all year. Oswaldo had to make a few adjustments to live here."

Oswaldo Villarroel, '73

Villarroel agreed. "My family had a special pair of boots made for me to keep my feet warm," Villarroel said. "I gave the boots away when I graduated from UND. It made me feel good to give something useful to a student who needed them more than I did."

By the time Villarroel graduated in 1973, he had returned to Bolivia to marry, and brought his wife, Martha, to the States. Their son, Christian, was born in Grand Forks.

"He loves to tell his friends that he was born in Grand Forks," Villarroel injected. "They all ask 'where on earth is that?'"

Martha and Christian were not allowed to remain in the U.S. after Villarroel graduated. They returned to Bolivia, and Villarroel moved to Washington, D.C., hoping to find work with an airline.

"Unfortunately, this was at the height of the fuel embargo, and the airlines were not hiring," Villarroel said.

Villarroel lived with a friend, first working as a cashier, and later as a clinic administrator. In 1975, he moved back to Bolivia, where he began working for Lloyd Aero at first in a "spy" position, Villarroel said with a laugh.

"The airline had just purchased a radar tracking system, and was using it to track planes in flight. It only worked when the pilots called in," Villarroel remarked.

The position lasted just a few months. An American pilot who was working as a consultant to Lloyd Aero discovered Villarroel one day and was amazed with Villarroel's ability to speak English. More amazing to the consultant was Villarroel's degree in aviation administration, and he promptly transferred Villarroel to operations.

Currently, Villarroel is training pilots in English for Air Traffic Control procedures necessary to fly into Miami. Lloyd Aero has 1,200 employees and 11 major aircraft. They fly all over South America.

In his spare time, Villarroel encourages his children in sports. He has four sons and a daughter, including a set of twins, between the ages of 7 and 13. They may continue a family tradition of attending UND, Villarroel said. As a matter of fact, the Villarroel family has sent several members to UND: Herman, '70, his wife, Olga, '71; Maria Villarroel Smeall, '84 and Jose, '85. Richmond's wife, Blanca, received a degree in 1985.

Villarroel still enjoys sports himself, playing volleyball and soccer for an "old timers" league. He remarked that he doesn't have many expectations of Bolivia's national soccer team these days.

"The won their first and last South American title in 1963," Villarroel said — the year he played for the team.

Fine arts alumni reflect on applications of UND education

The proof of an academic program is in its alumni. Former students of UND's College of Fine Arts, and of the fine arts programs which preceded it as a formal organization, are doing well. The Alumni Review called six of them at random.

Visual Arts

Lois Johnson, '64, studied art at UND when

The Hughes Fine Arts Center, headquarters for the UND College of Fine Arts, sits on the most scenic site on campus, along the banks of the English Coulee. The uniquely shaped structure houses the music and visual arts departments and the College's administrative offices. The building's interesting exterior suggests the variety of creative and exciting activity within.

the major was in the College of Education. Today she is a professional printmaker and a professor in printmaking at the Philadelphia College of Art. She regards teaching as "a collaborative effort, assisting someone who likes to do something that I enjoy," she said. Johnson, who believes it is important for art teachers to be "practicing professionals," has had several of her works exhibited and purchased by museums.

A Grand Forks native, Johnson has returned to North Dakota several times to exhibit her works at the North Dakota Museum of Art at UND.

Johnson earned a B.S. Ed. at UND; she earned an M.F.A. at the University of Wisconsin. "One of the advantages of UND's fine arts program now," Johnson said, "is the exposure to art through the museum. We didn't have anything like that at UND 20 years ago."

Being exposed to UND's variety of faculty expertise was good experience, said North Dakota oil painter David Christy, '75. Christy studied for a master's degree at UND after establishing a career as an artist in North Dakota. He now makes his living as a realist landscape painter. He has painted nine of 24 four-foot by six-foot panels commissioned for the North Dakota centennial in 1989. Christy plans to add 24 panels of his own to the project.

"Artists must keep producing to keep improving," Christy said. "I have enough to keep me busy through 1989 right now." Christy and his wife, Linda Brown, '73, also an artist, live on a farmstead near Valley City, N.D.

Music

Music and medicine have been lifelong interests, and Tom Peterson, '81, is pursuing both. Currently a first year medical student at UND, Peterson graduated from UND with undergraduate degrees in music and zoology. In 1983, he earned a master's degree in choral conducting from Sam Houston State University in Texas. He keeps active in music as the founder of Dakota Composers, an organization that promotes the compositions of young North Dakota musicians.

"The music program at UND allows students the room to grow in their areas of talent," Peterson says. "The program is growing, too, under the direction of the chairman, Dr. James Fry. I have to add that the Hughes Fine Arts Center is arguably the best facility in the country for music education."

Steve Jordheim, '79, agrees with Peterson's assessment of the Hughes Fine Arts Center, and added, "The UND program provides a good, general background from which students may specialize. The faculty has a variety of strengths." Jordheim teaches saxophone at the Lawrence Conservatory of Music in Appleton, Wis. In 1983, Jordheim won first place in saxophone competition at the 9th International Competition for Musical Performers in Geneva, Switzerland. In

Theatre addition

Burtness expansion pondered to enhance performing arts

Thanks to the Hughes Fine Arts Center, the University of North Dakota enjoys the finest musical and visual arts facilities in the state.

On the drawing board is a plan to bring UND's theatre arts facilities to the same high level by remodeling and expanding the 24-year-old Burtness Theatre.

All of the preliminary study and planning has been done by a committee appointed by UND President Thomas J. Clifford. The remaining obstacle — and it is a big one — is finding the money. The University is committed to allocating portions of its state-provided plant improvement budget to the structure over the next several years, but any new construction will have to come from private sources.

According to Fine Arts Dean Bruce Jacobsen, the project would convert Burtness Theatre into a first-rate, modern teaching facility for the performing arts.

The existing structure was designed with such a future expansion in mind, Jacobsen says. The project would enhance the lighting, sound and stage systems of the original theatre, as well as add an experimental theatre, new scenery and costume shops, classrooms, a movement studio, department offices and storage space.

The cost: Probably between $3.8 million and $5 million, depending upon what is included, Jacobsen says.

Professors/Performers

Double duty for fine arts faculty

Ph.D. in theatre — Jacobsen says he was persuaded to come to North Dakota six years ago by UND's commitment to the fine arts.

More recently, that kind of reputation has enabled the University to respond positively to the early retirement desires of such well known professors as Glenna Rundell, Elisabeth Lewis and Michael Polovitz of music and John Rogers of visual arts.

The College has recruited some of the best faculty members available in the national pool, Jacobsen says. He predicts such newcomers as violinist Barbara Rask, metal sculptor Robert Smith and theatre arts chairman James Graves, among others, soon will be familiar names in the state and region.

UND's fine arts faculty numbers 31 persons with the rank of assistant professor or higher and comprises the largest single concentration of professional artists between Minneapolis and the West Coast.

If there is one thing Jacobsen and his department chairmen (Graves of theatre arts, James Fry of music and Ronald Schaefer of visual arts) agree upon, it is the vital role the faculty plays in the success of any fine arts educational enterprise.

For one thing, students seriously interested in the study of art, music or theatre most often select a school on the basis of personal knowledge of the professors there. Or they are urged to consider a particular college by a high school teacher who has that personal knowledge.

To Jacobsen and his chairmen, the conclusion is obvious. Professors must practice their art publicly, whether it be through exhibition, musical and theatrical direction and performance, or service activities such as the teaching of workshops and the sponsoring of competitions and festivals.

A high profile faculty does more than recruit students: active professors help achieve one of the College's missions of creating more cultural opportunities for the citizens of the state and region.

And, notes Jacobsen, who still directs plays himself, most fine arts professors enjoy performance. The new UND Chamber Players may not yet enjoy the prestige of the Julliard String Quartet, he says, but the idea is the same. "The mission of the College is not restricted to teaching artistically gifted students. Majors in the fine arts represent a wide spectrum of ability, not all want to be practicing artists or performers. Among music majors especially, many plan to become teachers, not composers or concert performers.

Perhaps the most important mission of the College, Jacobsen says, is to provide instruction and performance opportunities to students generally, including those future business executives, lawyers, doctors and other professionals. Major status is not required to enroll in most classes, and students from all academic areas may participate in the college's music groups and in its theatre company.

Just how many students are enrolled in the College of Fine Arts?

The College's student body is difficult to summarize with one number, Jacobsen says. For example, if a theatre arts major is working toward the B.A. degree rather than the B.F.A., he or she is officially recorded on the rolls of the College of Arts and Sciences rather than that of the College of Fine Arts.

All together, about 165 undergraduate and 40 graduate students are majoring in the three departments, Jacobsen says. Close to 3,000 student enrollments are recorded each semester, reflecting the College's appeal to students who are majoring in other fields. Jacobsen and his faculty look to the future with optimism. The College's latest annual report boldly states its primary goal is to become "the foremost College of Fine Arts in the Northern Great Plains by the end of this decade."

Private support, crucial to the arts at UND in the past, will continue to be important, Jacobsen says, especially in the area of multiple-year merit scholarships for talented students who also are being recruited by other schools. The College also continues to seek a benefactor to assist with the remodeling and expansion of Burtness Theatre (see separate story).

Fiscal difficulties in the state will make accomplishment of the College's goal of excellence more difficult, Jacobsen concedes. Even so, he adds, "Never before have I been as sure of our success as I am now."

1984, he won first prize at the Concert Artists Guild International Competition held in New York City, which led to his debut at the Carnegie Recital Hall in May 1985. Jordheim would not have considered performance as a career without the urging of UND music professor Michael Polovitz, who also encouraged Jordheim to earn a master's degree from Northwestern University.

Theatre Arts

It began as a spin-off from her playwriting and acting career, but now Jean Mattson, '71, has been in the puppeteering business for 12 years. The Seattle Puppetry theatre performs original scripts for children and adults, Mattson said. The company is now Punch and Judy set-up. It has an up-to-date audio and lighting system and an eight-foot aluminum stage that will travel with the company to the Osaka International Puppetry Festival in Japan in April. The company features hand, rod and shadow puppets.

Mattson earned a master's degree in theatre arts at UND. It was here that she saw two of her plays, "The Petrosou Perogative" and "The Show's a Sell Out," performed for summer theatre. The experience "gave me a big boost as far as my playwriting was concerned," she said. "I just really enjoyed my years working on my master's degree at UND. The faculty helped me a great deal."

After two seasons with ABC's hit comedy "Kate and Allie," Harley Venton, '73, is busy preparing for a pilot program to appear on ABC this fall titled "Hardy House," about a neighborhood legal clinic.

Venton has played Susan St. James' husband, Max, on "Kate and Allie." He began as a stage actor in Minneapolis and New York after he earned a B.F.A. at UND. He then moved to television where he appeared on the soap opera, "The Guiding Light," as Derek Colby from 1980 to 1982.

Venton said that he learned more than acting at UND. From building sets and helping behind the scenes, "I learned the basic craft there," he said. "I really look back on the experience as laying a very good foundation for my career." Venton said the UND theatre curriculum is more well-rounded than other departments he had seen around the country.

Music majors and non-majors alike may participate in the University Band, Wind Ensemble, Jazz Choir, Concert Choir and other music groups. Conducting the University Band here is Conrad Miska, a graduate student in music. The students have access to 14 practice rooms, all equipped with pianos. There also are choral, ensemble and instrumental rooms for group practices and two recital halls, including the 196-seat Josephine Campbell Recital Hall.

Not so pretty, but practical Early American folk pottery donated to U by 1932 grad

One of the first male ceramic students at the University of North Dakota is making another mark of distinction on his alma mater. James Carley, '32, has donated almost half of his early American folk pottery collection to the UND College of Fine Arts. Carley, of Brasston, N.C., donated 235 pieces, appraised at $15,000, from his collection to UND.

The folk pottery consists mostly of pots and jugs for kitchen purposes. They vary in size and shape, but most are heavy and simple in design. Some of the pieces date back to the 17th century in America.

"Go into your kitchen and try to imagine how you would manage to store things without glass, plastic containers, refrigerators and enameled pots and pans," Carley said. "You can understand how valuable these ceramic jugs and other containers were to our ancestors."

The pottery was not designed to be beautiful, Carley added, although it has a certain appeal "because it is simple, direct, appropriate to its function, and (designed) in folk traditions which tend to refine down to essentials."

The Visual Arts Department has pronounced the collection "museum quality," said Dr. Ron Schaefer, chairman of the department.

"These are items usually found in antique shops. We're very excited to have them, and we think the pots will make an impressive display," Schaefer said.

Carley, a retired choral conductor, has been collecting folk pottery for about 45 years, he said. He became interested in ceramics as a child, when his mother gave him some clay to model. Later, as a freshman student at UND, Carley and several friends decided to become the first male class of ceramic students. Until that time, only women enrolled in ceramics courses at UND.

Carley worked at a variety of jobs during the Depression. He was a potter at Marshall Fields department store in Chicago and later, a member of the Federal Theatre, a government project to provide jobs.

Eventually, Carley ended up at Northwestern University to earn a master's degree as a voice teacher. In 1952, he earned a doctor of sacred music degree at Union Theological Seminary in New York. Carley moved around, teaching at Pacific University in Oregon and North Texas State University. He then accepted a position at Christian Theological Seminary in Indianapolis as professor of church music. Carley taught there for 20 years, and retired as professor emeritus of church music. He and his wife, Isabel, have three children and several grandchildren.

Although Carley moved around, he managed to continue collecting pottery. The collection is divided into three categories: redware, stoneware and southern alkaline glaze.

The redware is made from red clay and glazed with lead. "Not particularly healthy, is it?" Carley remarked. The pottery represents the oldest form of pottery making in the United States. It was most common in the New England area where some is still made.

The stoneware is made with a "salt glaze," Carley described. It is grayish-white in color. Later, cobalt was added to the outside to make it more attractive for buyers.

The southern alkaline glaze pottery has a drip-like appearance, similar to an ancient Chinese method. Carley added that he has not been able to discover how the method was learned in the South.

Award winning professors, departments

More than $16,000, much of it from the University of North Dakota Foundation, was awarded Feb. 27 to nine professors and three departments for their outstanding contributions in teaching, research and public service at the University of North Dakota.

The winners received plaques and cash awards at the UND Founders Day banquet, marking the 103rd anniversary of the University. About 700 faculty, staff and friends attended the banquet held in the UND Memorial Union Ballroom.

The 1985-86 awards winners were:

Nanak Grewal, associate professor of mechanical engineering, UND Foundation/Lydia and Arthur Saiki Prize for Undergraduate Teaching Excellence, plaque and $1,000. Grewal was noted for encouraging students both professionally and personally, and was given a special award last fall created by present and former students.

Steven Harlow, professor of special education, UND Foundation/Lydia and Arthur Saiki Prize for Graduate and Graduate Professional Teaching Excellence, plaque and $1,000. Harlow is regarded as a scholar, teacher and role model for his students.

Beverly Brekke, professor of special education, UND Foundation/B.C. Gamble Award for Individual Excellence in Teaching and Service, plaque and $1,500. Brekke's achievements include work in the area of sex education for the mentally handicapped, and directing the North Dakota Elderhostel program.

Thomas Petros, associate professor of psychology, UND Foundation/Edward McDermott Award for Individual Excellence in Teaching and Research, plaque and $1,000. Petros, who conducts memory research, "goes the extra mile" for students, said one nominator.

Glenn Prigge, professor of mathematics, Burlington Northern Foundation Award for Outstanding Teaching and Faculty Development, plaque and $2,000. Prigge worked with state high school and college math programs to improve student proficiency.

John D. Williams, professor of measurement and statistics, Burlington Northern Foundation Award for Outstanding Teaching and Faculty Development, plaque and $2,000. Williams is regarded as the "unofficial" research adviser for numerous students.

Sharon Wilsnack, professor of neuroscience, Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Scholar Award, plaque and $2,000. Wilsnack directed a national survey on drinking and problem drinking in women.

Stephen Wikel, associate professor of microbiology and immunology, The Sigma Xi Faculty Award for Outstanding Scientific Research, medallion and cash honorarium. Wikel is considered an international authority on host immunity to tick infestations.

Mary Lou Fuller, assistant professor of elementary education, UND Student Government/Fellows of the University Outstanding Advising Award, plaque and $1,000. Fuller, in addition to teaching, offers academic, career and personal counseling.

The department of aviation, Fellows of the University Award for Departmental Excellence in Public Service, plaque and $1,500. The aviation department sponsors several outreach programs for youth. In addition to teaching 1,300 students, the seven faculty members work as consultants.

The department of home economics and nutrition, UND Foundation/Lucille M. McDermott Award for Departmental Excellence in Teaching, plaque and $1,500. The department was the first at UND to apply a systematic department-wide approach to using computers.

The department of chemistry, Fellows of the University Award for Departmental Excellence in Research, plaque and $1,500. The department has produced several professional papers and presentations, in addition to supervising the studies of 31 graduate students.

Years of service, retiring professors

Thirteen professors were recognized for their service to the University of North Dakota during its annual Founders Day banquet Feb. 27.

Being honored for 25 years of service were Robert Hollenbeck, associate professor of elementary education; Patricia Mauch, associate professor of health, physical education and recreation; Donald McCaffrey, professor of English; Louis Palanca, professor of languages; Virgil Stenberg, professor of chemistry; Playford Thorson, associate professor of history; Robert Van Voorhis, professor of music and John Whitcomb, associate professor of mathematics and director of Freshman Mathematics.

Retired or retiring personnel who were recognized are William Barney, professor of mechanical engineering; Louis Bogan, associate professor of health, physical education and recreation; Ralph Brown, professor of geography; Robert Kemper, associate professor of accounting and business law and John Noll, professor of psychology.

A Norwegian immigrant, Hjellum and his family settled in Carrington, N.D. Graduating from UND in 1934 with a J.D. and LL.B., Hjellum worked for law firms in Carrington and Jamestown before becoming a partner in a Jamestown law firm. He also was an assistant and state's attorney for Stutsman County.

Hjellum served in the Army during World War II. He is married to Helen J. (Fodness), '34, who was the first elected UND Homecoming queen in 1933. The Hjellums enjoy traveling and have visited Europe, the Far East and the West Indies. They have three children: Janice Peterson (Hjellum), Joan Sitton (Hjellum), and John Hjellum II, '63.

Boynnton's list of activities covers everything from Little League baseball to hospital boards to national political conventions.

Almost 25 years ago, Boynnton became the first female Little League Coach in Ukiah, Calif. A coach was not available for her son's team and she volunteered, bringing along her daughters to batting practice. Though the team did not win a pennant, they became very popular with the fans.

Boynnton has been a leader for Camp Fire Girls and Cub Scouts, a member of the American Field Service, the Ukiah school district, a Red Cross volunteer and a church deacon.

She has been appointed to two California state hospital advisory boards. In 1972, she received the "Highest Achievement Award" from the California Mental Health Association for outstanding volunteer contributions.

Boynnton was named the 1968 Ukiah Republican Women's Outstanding Political Volunteer of the Year. She was a delegate to the 1968 and 1972 Republican national conventions. For six years, she was chairperson of the Republican Central Committee of Mendocino County.

Other honors Boynnton has received include a Presidential appointment in 1971 to the Advisory Board of the National Archives and 1972 Woman of Achievement Award from the Soroptimists of Ukiah. In 1968, she was nominated nationally as Woman of the Year.

Boynnton has served as chairperson of the Mendocino County Planning Commission and the Mendocino Transit Authority. She currently serves as a director and chairman of the Board of the West America Bank of Mendocino County.

"Marje" graduated from UND in 1946 with a degree in psychology and social work. Active at UND, she was a member of Delta Gamma sorority, Phi Beta Kappa, Psi Upsilon Nu and Matrix.

Marje and her husband, Si, a dentist, have three children and three grandchildren.

Haugen has practiced medicine for more than 50 years — most of them in Larimore, N.D. In 1975, he became locally famous for finding his way through a blizzard to deliver two babies at private homes. During his medical career, Haugen has delivered more than 1,000 babies at private homes and hospitals.

In addition to medical practice, Haugen has held numerous appointments: County Physician for Grand Forks County, Great Northern Railroad Surgeon, Larimore City Health Officer and Medical Examiner for the Selective Service.

A member of the American, North Dakota and Grand Forks Medical Associations, Haugen also is a member of the 50 Year Medical Club, consisting of only 1,300 doctors across the United States. He is a charter member of the American Academy of Family Physicians.

Haugen is still active in his medical practice at Larimore. He also is credited with helping to establish a 68-bed nursing home.

Medicine is not Haugen's only interest. At one time, he farmed five sections of land and raised a band of sheep. Among numerous community activities, Haugen has served as lodge master of the Masons and as a Boy Scout leader.

A North Dakota native, Haugen graduated from UND's Model High School in 1923. He earned a bachelor's degree in 1926 and a master of science in medicine in 1927 at UND. Haugen completed his medical training at Rush Medical College and the University of Chicago in 1930.

Haugen returned to UND as an assistant professor of anatomy in the medical school, later becoming director of student health. In 1935, Haugen left UND to establish a private practice in Larimore, N.D. He also married Fern (Breitwieser), '35.

He and his wife have one son, Clifford, and two grandchildren.

UND Alumni Tours to the Best of places with the Best of friends

Our packages vary with places, prices, and transportation. But UND Alumni Tours have one constant — the friendliness of alumni family members!

Make 1986 your year to experience the mystery of Spain and Morocco, or the centuries-old beauty of France and the Rhone River, with UND alumni and friends.

THE RHONE RIVER CRUISE, June 24-July 7, 1986, begins in glorious Cannes on the sparkling French Riviera. Then board the French cruise ship M.S. Arlene for a week-long cruise on the scenic Rhone River through the heart of France — land of Roman ruins, castles and the world's finest cuisine. Experience Paris — the city of light, and capital of fashion and art! Come discover the diversity of this wonderful country! Fares begin at $2995 per person from Chicago.

PASSAGE OF THE MOORS, Sept. 12-26, 1986, tours mysterious Morocco and scintillating Spain. You'll step back in time while following the paths of cultural richness developed over 700 years ago. This tour links Europe and Africa through their historical heritage while exploring both Tangier and Rabat, Morocco, sailing through the Straits of Gibraltar, or discovering the beautiful Royal Palace, the renowned Prado Museum and, of course, the magnificent warm, blue waters of the Mediterranean. Travel through exciting Spanish cities of Seville, Granada and Madrid while on this "once-in-a-lifetime" trip. Fares begin at $2425 per person from New York.

A Charitable Remainder Unitrust SUCCESS STORY!

A 1932 UND alumnus says, "From personal experiences I can recommend a charitable remainder unitrust arrangement with the UND Foundation."

In 1973, the UND alumnus made a gift of $50,000, consisting mostly of appreciated stock to the UND Foundation, as part of a charitable remainder unitrust. Here is what happened:

- He escaped a capital gains tax obligation which would have resulted if he had sold the stock.
- He received a $19,000 charitable deduction equaling nearly 40% of his original contribution (annual deductions for gifts of appreciated property are limited to 30% of donor's adjusted gross income, with a 5-year carryover).
- A unitrust is a life or term income arrangement based on an agreed percentage applied against an annual valuation of the corpus of the trust. His arrangement with the UND Foundation was 8% to be paid in monthly payments. He received $334.00 a month during the first year.
- Because the trust is valued each year his monthly income from the unitrust has risen annually — more than keeping up with inflation.
- The donor's $50,000 initial trust value in 1973, with payments of $334.00 a month, has risen in value each year to a December 31, 1985 valuation of $96,500.00 with monthly payments of $650.00 for 1986.
- He became a member of a UND Foundation Giving Club with his unitrust contribution. He also has made arrangements with the UND Foundation for the unitrust's remainder to fund a named endowment for support of priority projects at UND.

Carter bequest provides medical student loans

A $100,000 endowment to provide loans to University of North Dakota medical students has been established in the UND Foundation by a bequest in honor of her husband from Margaret Dickinson Carter, '25.

In keeping with the wishes of Mrs. Carter, who died Nov. 13, 1983, income from the endowment will annually provide new capital into the Ronald Plotts Carter Loan Fund.

According to UND Foundation Executive Vice President Earl Strinden, this perpetual replenishment, together with loan repayments and interest income, will result in an important source of temporary assistance for students of modest means who otherwise could not meet the high cost of medical education. The first loans will be granted this fall.

Margaret Dickinson of Minot and Ronald Carter of Warwick met while both were students at UND in the early 1920s, Strinden said, she completing her degree in education and he a B.A. followed by a B.S. in medicine. Ronald went on to earn his M.D. from Rush Medical School, affiliated with the University of Chicago, and to a successful practice. He died in 1971.

Mrs. Carter, who at one time was head dietician of the Seattle City Hospital, renewed her interest in UND later in life, Strinden said. In 1975, she attended the 50th Anniversary Reunion of the Class of 1925. Dividing her time between homes in Seattle and Palm Springs, Calif., she remained active in community activities and traveled extensively, including travel on several alumni tours.

Alumni aid students with donations for loan funds

The University's oldest student loan fund dates back to the period 1911 to 1915, when a group of early alumni who preferred to remain anonymous established the "Student Loan Fund" which has been maintained continuously since then.

In more than 70 years, hundreds of students have benefited from the fund, which has been used primarily for emergency short term loans of the kind that sometimes spell the difference between remaining in school and having to drop out.

According to UND financial aid officials, since the late 1950s undergraduate students have relied upon the federal government to provide or to guarantee loans. Universities have not been eager to become deeply involved in the headaches of the banking business, except in such priority areas as short term loans and in such specialized areas as the graduate and professional schools where student needs are not being met.

Thus, says UND Foundation Executive Vice President Earl Strinden, alumni and friends who wish to assist students through their gifts are encouraged to provide flexibility for the Foundation to fill current or future gaps in UND's financial aid capability. The needs, he said, will vary over time, ranging from loans to work study opportunities to need-based scholarships to scholarships based on "merit" alone.

The Foundation, he added, would be happy to provide further information.

Giving clubs

Loyal alumni and friend support is an important part of the great University of North Dakota tradition. The UND Foundation Giving Club designation honors those who, by reaching a level of giving, are investing in the ongoing growth and development of UND. Below are the names of members who have joined since the lists were last published.
