A visit from THE President

November 1986

University of North Dakota

ALUMNI REVIEW

Rousing reception greets Reagan

By SUE BERG

The 86 quick minutes he spent on the University of North Dakota campus will be remembered among the noteworthy events in the history of UND.

Friday, Oct. 17, President Ronald Reagan came to UND to campaign for North Dakota Sen. Mark Andrews.

Speaking in the UND fieldhouse at noon, President Reagan seemed delighted with the enthusiastic reception he received from the overflow crowd estimated at 9,000.

A great many in the fieldhouse were Republican partisans, but others — perhaps the majority — were citizens of every political hue who appreciated the opportunity to see first hand the President of the United States. Hundreds more were turned away when the arena reached its capacity.

The Andrews re-election campaign rented the fieldhouse for the president's appearance. UND President Tom Clifford said, "The appearance of the president of the United States in North Dakota is a rare privilege. The University of North Dakota believes it should make a platform available for the nation's leader regardless of political affiliation."

Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Alumni Association and the North Dakota house majority leader emceed the program and said,

"When the president of our great nation comes to visit, we are not Republican, Democrat or Independent, we are all Americans. We're very proud to have this opportunity to welcome the president of the United States to our community."

UND's public relations director, Dave Vorland, '65, was delighted with the high regional, and even national profile the University enjoyed up to, during and after the event. It is very rare, he noted, that a news event, other than an athletic contest, is carried live on television across the state of North Dakota.

Many key campus personnel put forward their best efforts to help the White House, Secret Service and Andrews campaign teams prepare the elaborate staging and hoopla that greeted the president. In addition, many UND students — especially fraternity and sorority members — literally worked day and night.

"It was like preparing for an old fashioned Homecoming or Prom," noted a member of the UND Young Republicans.

People began to line up at 3 a.m. on the crisp October morning. When the doors opened, several musical groups were in place to provide entertainment. Red, white and blue balloons and bunting decorated the arena. Blue drapes hung over and behind the president's platform.

Once inside, the crowd showered the arena with infectious high spirits, waved American flags and displayed hand-lettered posters welcoming the president.

Research, training involved

Northwest, U enter contract

By GERRI SAYLER

Northwest Airlines has forged a link with the University of North Dakota that promises to be the most exciting course yet embarked upon by its fast track aviation program.

In mid-October, officials of NWA Inc., parent to the world's fifth largest air carrier, announced plans to enter into joint flight training and research ventures with UND's Center for Aerospace Sciences (CAS).

"Having an ally like Northwest is a powerful endorsement of what we're trying to do," says John D. Odegard with unabashed pride. What the exuberant, fast-talking aerospace sciences dean and his blue-ribbon list of supporters have been trying to do since the aviation department was founded is to bring government, industry and education together into a fully-integrated aerospace program.

"Synergy — that's what we're after. This partnership with Northwest will make it happen," Odegard said. "We're expecting a tremendous spinoff effect in the years to come."

The NWA-UND pact went public just a week after another windfall was announced for the burgeoning aerospace program: a $3 million federal grant to add a third wing to the sleek, atrium-topped complex. The money that has gone into building and equipping the one-of-a-kind aerospace facility, already worth over $12 million, has come by way of North Dakota Sen. Mark Andrews who chairs the Senate Appropriations Sub-Committee on Transportation.

The newest addition will be the research and development arm of CAS, equipped for production of multi-media instructional aids and distribution of course materials to other collegiate aviation programs via satellite. A spring groundbreaking ceremony is expected for the new wing.

Hetherington leaves major bequest to U

A $100,000 bequest from the estate of Mary Elizabeth Hetherington, '26, has established a permanent endowment with the University of North Dakota Foundation to fund several scholarships.

Hetherington died April 27 at the age of 81 in Bismarck, N.D., where she had made her home in recent years. The diminutive, white haired educator had taught school in Saginaw, Mich., for nearly 40 years, earning a national reputation as a high school English teacher and as a writer and editor of educational materials.

Homecoming Was A Success

It has been a busy and exciting fall. Homecoming '86 lived up to our expectations and more. A most sincere "thank you" to everyone who came back, and especially to all of the alumni volunteers who helped to organize the many reunions, including the Saturday night All Alumni Party. We have good reason to believe UND Homecoming celebrations rank as one of the best, from an organization and participation standpoint, of any college or university in the nation.

It isn't too early to mark your calendar for Homecoming '87 Oct. 1-3. We are already working to make the next one the biggest and best ever.

A Unique Reunion

It was a rare opportunity when Fritz Pollard and some of his track and football teammates and their spouses gathered in the Alumni Center during Homecoming. I thought you would enjoy reading UND Alumni Association President Chuck Johnson's account of this evening. Chuck, a UND journalism graduate with a distinguished career in the newspaper and writing profession, remembers reading and hearing about the athletic exploits of these Fighting Sioux greats when he was growing up in Williston, N.D. Here is Chuck's account:

Jack Mackenroth was enjoying the reunion of the University of North Dakota's football teams of almost one-half a century ago. "I led the way for Fritz Pollard," he said with a laugh.

"You were too slow," someone else said. "You couldn't get out of anybody's way." The banter continued at the Homecoming '86 gathering at the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center. Finally, a teammate asked Mackenroth, the tackle, if he still had Pollard's cleat marks on his back. Pollard spoke up. "Look," said the all-everything halfback of the Sioux in 1936, 1937 and 1938, "those linemen cleared the way. If they had let them get through, I would have had opponents' cleat marks all over me!"

Pollard was honored at Homecoming 50 years after he took third place in the high hurdles for a bronze medal in the 1936 Olympic games at Berlin. Many of his Sioux teammates in football and track were on hand to help honor the former halfback. At the Sioux Awards dinner, special awards were given to Pollard and to Horace "Hoss" Johnson who won three letters each at UND in football, basketball and track. Freshmen weren't eligible for varsity sports then. Pollard also was acknowledged during halftime at the Homecoming football game and served as Grand Marshal of the Homecoming parade.

For the most part, the late C. A. "Jack" West recruited hometown players for UND, including his own son, Jack West, who centered the football to Pollard, the team's tailback and field general. At the reunion, Mackenroth and Wilbur Gehrke, another line star, pointed at the younger West agreeing that he had to work twice as hard as any other player. "Coach West didn't want anyone to think that he favored his son," Mackenroth said.

Pollard and Johnson were definitely not North Dakota products. Pollard's father, Frederick Douglass "Fritz" Pollard Sr., played for Brown University in the Rose Bowl. He also played and coached in the National Football League. He was the NFL's only head football coach with the Milwaukee Badgers. Fritz Jr. was brought up in Chicago and wanted to go to Northwestern University, but his father wanted him to go to Brown. "North Dakota had contacted me," the younger Pollard recalled. "In fact, Starbuck (West's assistant coach) came down to see me. But I looked at their schedule, and at the end of the next season, they were going to play several southern teams on the road, and I didn't think I would be welcome in those cities." So Fritz Jr. went to Brown, but he didn't like it. "Let's just say that my father and I crossed wires," he said. The younger Pollard went home to Chicago from Providence and Brown, and the persistent Jack West contacted him again. This time, he went to North Dakota. "I decided to become my own man," he said. Hoss Johnson, meanwhile, had grown up in Colorado, then moved with his stepfather, a Methodist minister, to Globe, Ariz., where he went to high school. "I hadn't even considered going to college, but my high school principal was determined that I would go," Johnson recalled. The principal checked out various schools and decided that North Dakota was the place for his star-athlete. He had found that the "big ten" at the time had a gentlemen's agreement that blacks could not play basketball, and he wanted Johnson to be able to compete in three sports.

President Reagan Visits UND

It's always a thrill and honor when the President of the United States comes to visit. The national news focused on the University of North Dakota campus Friday, Oct. 17, when President Reagan addressed a large and enthusiastic crowd of 9,000 in the Hyslop Sports Center. Whether party affiliations may have been Republican, Democrat or Independent, when the President arrived in Grand Forks, the audience was made up of proud Americans. The President and the White House staff who accompanied him on the trip were most impressed with the campus of the University of North Dakota and the genuine friendliness of the people. Again, UND did itself proud—not only with the excellent performance of the Varsity Bands and the UND Marching Band, but by making this historic event a "class act" in every sense of the word. A member of the White House advance team told me he had been at many similar presidential appearances around the nation, but nothing topped the event at the University of North Dakota for enthusiasm and friendliness.

For a long time, we have rightfully claimed that North Dakota's number one product is the kind of people it produces. The presidential visit gave us another opportunity to display this fact.

Olympian, teammates reunite at Homecoming

Pollard, pals return to U

By GIAN SCHAUER

Fritz Pollard, '39, the bronze medal hurdles winner of the 1936 Olympics, returned to the University of North Dakota to attend Homecoming on the 50th anniversary of his Olympic feat. Homecoming also marked the 50-year reunion of his track and football teammates from 1936 to 1939.

Nearly everywhere he went on the UND campus, Pollard received recognition during the fall festivities. Throughout all the accolades and applause, however, the gracious Pollard always acknowledged someone else — the defensive line, a coach, his father.

"I am in awe of everything that happened this weekend," Pollard said. He and his wife, Addefie, left a warm home in Silver Springs, Md., to participate in the events of a crisp October weekend.

A Sioux award winner in 1968, Pollard and UND teammate Horace "Hoss" Johnson were awarded special honors during the Sioux Awards banquet this year. Later, enjoying the reunion of his teammates, Pollard talked about his life's experiences, including those at UND.

Pollard came to UND through the coaxing of C.A. West, UND football coach and athletic director, to "take the smallest school I could find and put it on the map," Pollard said. Playing football at UND seemed an agreeable idea to Pollard because North Dakota was among a few schools that allowed black athletes to play at a high level of competition.

"UND didn't even know that I ran track," at the time he was recruited, Pollard remembers.

He corrected that oversight. Although freshman students were not allowed to compete at that time, Pollard kept up a training regimen that now is a classic campus tale.

"I started running for exercise on the tops of the boxcars on the railroad tracks behind the gym, all bundled up in the winter," Pollard said. "In the spring, I carried the hurdles from the football field to the gym to practice. It was so cold we couldn't work outside. I ran during the noon hours because it was the only time I could, and I had to tell the people here what to look for," in hurdling.

A week prior to a freshman track meet that spring, Pollard had a time trial that equaled a world record.

"That opened their eyes," Pollard said, with a grin. He was invited to his hometown of Chicago for a promotional meet, where he won against two of the best hurdlers in the world. From there, he went to Minneapolis for his first official time test, and qualified for competitions in Chicago and Milwaukee.

UND didn't have the resources to send a trainer with Pollard to the meets. Instead, Coach West accompanied him.

Pollard was chuckling as he said,

"C.A. had the camera that he used to film football. He got so excited when I won the track meet at Milwaukee that the camera fell over and he didn't get any pictures."

From Milwaukee, Pollard went on alone to New York to qualify for the Olympic team. He remembers the boat ride to Germany, and how the apprehension he felt as a black athlete in North Dakota was dispelled.

"At first I was an oddity in North Dakota and I wasn't sure how they felt about me," Pollard said. "I had a pleasant surprise at the start of the boat trip, however, that really made me feel good about my choice of schools. Jesse Owens, Tony Johnson and myself all shared the same stateroom. When we got to the room, it was filled with all kinds of flowers and telegrams. Of course, we all thought they were for Jesse, but they were for me. That's the way the people responded, not only from Grand Forks, but all over North Dakota. That was something unheard of in this area... I mean, a trackman!"

Pollard sprained his ankle during the trip and didn't run until the preliminaries in Berlin. During the semifinals, Pollard learned a tip from his teammate and competitor, Speck Thomas.

"He jumped the gun and they didn't call him back," Pollard said. "I was always taught to hold my start. At this time, I changed my whole strategy. Speck was my most formidable foe and I knew if he got out in front of me, I was lost. I just couldn't afford to let him get a head start on me because his style was flawless. He always came out fast in the end and my timing wasn't that good.

"So 'auf die Plätze' (on your mark), 'fertig' (ready), and I started to move, to roll and was a little ahead of myself, so I started to go back, but something just told me to go. I was way out in front, but it told at the end because it threw my timing..."

"I thought I had blown the whole thing. Then they told me I had third place. They marched me up the platform with a garland on my head and played 'Star Spangled Banner' while they ran up the flag, and I got my medal."

By the time Pollard returned to UND, school had started. Along the way, Pollard enjoyed a ticketape parade reception in New York and a medal from the mayor. Back in North Dakota, however, there were no speeches or receptions. At UND, he went straight to football practice.

In 1937, Pollard made the Little All America football team, but suffered an injury to his heel. The injury prevented him from participating in track sports until his senior year. He graduated in 1939 with a bachelor of science degree in education.

Although he intended to compete in the 1940 Olympics, the second World War prevented it, and Pollard began working in the Army special services to combat discrimination.

Since that time, Pollard has held a variety of positions promoting education and civil rights. He gave up his senior year at John Marshall law school in Chicago to take a position on the Chicago commission on human relations. He was the executive director of the equal opportunities division of the Department of State. He became senior adviser to the director of the State Department Overseas Schools Bureau, and traveled around the world to establish schools in countries without public school systems. Pollard also was director of the Office of Equal Employment Opportunity in the state department.

During his career with the U.S. State Department, Pollard worked with Idar Rimestad, '40. Rimestad, who now lives in Fountain Hills, Ariz., had a distinguished career in the U.S. State Department, including serving with the rank of ambassador in Geneva, Switzerland.

Close friends, Pollard credits Rimestad, then Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, for being influential in securing Pollard's appointment.

Reflecting on his life's achievements during Homecoming at UND, Pollard said, "If I had everything to do over again, the only thing I would change would be to do everything just a little bit better."

"It's a funny thing to ask a young boy what he is going to be. An engineer, maybe. I couldn't buy that because I was the only black kid in the community, and the father of the kid down the block was an engineer who wouldn't allow me to come into the house to play. He had never seen or heard of any black engineers, either," Pollard said.

"One other thing I will never forget," Pollard continued. "I was taking mechanical engineering, and Dad asked why. Because I liked it, I said. He said, you may like it but it's not for you. You can't become an engineer."

"That's when I stopped liking math. For awhile, I almost lost interest in everything."

Pollard regained his interest, and built that feeling of defeat into a commitment, he said. It's a dream that tells him to never give up, no matter what is said or how impossible the odds may seem.

By MAUREEN CARRIGAN

The moment after Jay Johnson and his bride, Joy Leiran Johnson, were pronounced man and wife, everyone in the church wondered what they would do next. Would she get behind his wheelchair and push him back down the aisle? His friends knew that would hardly be his style. A master at disarming a tense situation, Johnson flung his new bride onto his lap and they wheeled merrily toward the door.

"There was a lot of clapping and a lot of tears. It was great," said Johnson, '84.

At 29, Johnson has become known as a straight talker on issues of the disabled. After being injured in a motorcycle accident eight years ago, Johnson realized that he was going to have to help himself or be destined to live life in a nursing home. He heard about a group out of Minneapolis called Wilderness Inquiry II, which took able bodied and physically disabled people on challenging canoe and dogsledding trips in the woods. His first trip not only showed him that he could still take an active part in the outdoors but it showed his friends that he wasn't as fragile as they feared.

"I was a longtime outdoors person and after my accident my friends were scared to bring me out. After I went with Wilderness Inquiry II, they got the confidence to take me with them again. Just last weekend, we went deer hunting."

Johnson, who was a leader on a 40-mile canoe trip down the Missouri River in North Dakota last July, said that water is the perfect medium for a disabled person to experience the outdoors.

"After being on the river, you can come back into the city and see that the curbs and the stairs and the condescending attitudes are really nothing," he said. "Wilderness Inquiry II is a chance for the disabled to try something new and take some controlled risks."

Wilderness Inquiry II practices the philosophy of everyone doing as much as they can, together. While the able bodied unload canoes, people in the chairs start the evening meal or set up tents or any of the other things that are required on a camping trip.

Wilderness Inquiry II is only one of several organizations that Johnson involves himself with. He is currently director of the new Center for Independent Living in East Grand Forks, Minn. This center, which serves northeastern North Dakota and northwestern Minnesota, is an information network for the disabled.

"Even though the services are out there, finding out how to access them and which ones are best and where to call can be very difficult," Johnson said. "We aren't out to duplicate services that already exist. We want to be a resource center that can help people use them better."

Brad Mikkelsen, '80, is given a lift from the canoe to the campsite by Kevin Gregoire and Darleen Oehlke. Typically, the able bodied people unload canoes while the people in wheelchairs start supper or set up camp.

Johnson has changed the way many people perceive the disabled in the Red River Valley. He has been at the forefront of "Run the Red," a road race for the disabled and able bodied that has netted $25,000 in the last two years. He has participated on the Mayor's Committee for Employment of the Handicapped and just finished chairing the National Council on Independent Living. Formerly an occupational therapist at the United Hospital in Grand Forks, Johnson now commits himself fulltime to running the Center for Independent Living.

News briefs

Once again, national recognition has been awarded to a unique group of engineering students at the University of North Dakota.

The members of the UND student section of the Society of Women Engineers won the title as Best Student Section in the nation for the 1985-86 academic year. They first won the honor in 1982.

Competition for the honor is stiff, according to Lisa Schmitz, this year's SWE president and a senior in electrical engineering. The UND section must win the regional award to compete for the national award as best student section.

There are 230 student sections of SWE in the nation, divided into 10 regions. UND is in the second largest region with 36 sections that include the University of Minnesota, the University of Wisconsin, Northwestern, Purdue and Notre Dame.

"It was a complete surprise to win the national award," Schmitz said. Schmitz and other delegates from the UND SWE section received the award at the national convention held in Hartford, Conn., in May. At the convention, students met several UND engineering alumni, including Kathleen Spilman, '81, and LeeAnn Leich (Boushley), '80.

A conference about rural life, focusing on farmers and farming, will be held Nov. 16-21 at the University of North Dakota. Organized by the Group for Interdisciplinary Theory and Praxis, the conference title is "Down to Earth: People on the Land." Guest speakers will cover topics ranging from economics to poetry, history to technology. For more information, contact Dr. Lynn Lindholm, chairman and associate professor of philosophy and GITAP coordinator, at Box 41 University Station, Grand Forks, ND 58202 or call (701) 777-3161 or 777-2708.

Northwest Airlines, U announce joint venture

The Northwest agreement comes after nearly two years of discussions and includes plans to build an advanced pilot training center on campus to be operated by Northwest Aerospace Training Corp. (NATCO), the newly-created subsidiary of NWA Inc.

Where the facility will be located and what it will look like are yet to be decided. Plans are focused on a scaled-down version of the $19 million state-of-the-art flight technology facility under construction at the world headquarters of NWA Inc. in Eagan, Minn. Officials are uncertain about when construction of the Grand Forks division would begin, although mid-summer has been suggested as a possibility.

Both the Grand Forks and Eagan facilities will be equipped with the industry's most advanced flight simulators and cockpit procedures trainers. Northwest currently has full-motion simulators for all its aircraft — the 747, the 727, the 757 and the DC-10 — at a cost of $12 million each. The airline also plans to purchase simulators for the newest additions to its fleet — the 747-400 and the Airbus 320.

In addition to serving the rapidly-expanding needs of Northwest, who recently merged with Republic, the comprehensive training programs at both locations will be marketed to airlines worldwide.

When making the announcement in Grand Forks, Steven G. Rothmeier, NWA Inc. chairman and chief executive officer, spoke of a critical pilot shortage in parts of Europe and the Far East, places where the company has sold used aircraft for the past 25 years.

"A way to meet the requirements for commercial pilots in those countries would be to simply start training at the university level," Rothmeier said. "So, one of the things we plan to do... is make it possible for foreign carriers to bring students to the United States to this university plus their ticket to fly 727s."

UND students will benefit the most from the new cooperative effort. "We'll be the only school in the world where students will have the opportunity to fly their beginning lesson as a private pilot and graduate four years later with a 727 flight engineer rating," Odegard says. "There's no question that having those credentials will pitch our students into the big league of commercial aviation very, very quickly."

The new joint venture into flight training and research with UND was announced by Steven G. Rothmeier, chairman and chief executive officer of NWA Inc., parent company of Northwest Airlines.

Hall of Fame established on campus

Early entrepreneurs still have ties to UND

by MAUREEN CARRIGAN

Thomas Campbell, UND's first engineering graduate in 1904, spent his life solving problems for presidents and inventing new ways to feed the world. George Bull, a turn of the century Grand Forks miller, also fed the world. But an early death prevented him from witnessing the breakfast revolution that followed after his mill's invention, Cream of Wheat, hit the market.

While both stories are well documented, a new family perspective emerged when Elizabeth Ann Campbell-Knapp and David Bull visited the UND Alumni Center during Thomas Campbell and George Bull's induction into the North Dakota Entrepreneur Hall of Fame. The Hall of Fame is sponsored by UND's Center for Innovation & Business Development in the UND School of Engineering and Mines.

The lives of the two entrepreneurs are entwined. Bull's daughter, Bess, married Thomas Campbell. Elizabeth Ann is granddaughter to Bull and daughter to Thomas Campbell. Her cousin, David, is grandson to Bull and nephew to Campbell.

Of her father, Campbell-Knapp said "his life was divided into seasons." Campbell's 95,000 acre wheat farm, the largest in the world in 1928, required that he commute from his California home to Montana for planting and harvesting. Campbell, known as the "Wheat King," invented the Campbell Grain Dryer and the windrow method of harvesting. He used advanced methods of soil conservation and fertilization. In his lifetime he was called have ever seen."

"He was a global thinker," said Bull of his uncle. Campbell was a colonel and special adviser in the Air Force during World War II and he watched events unfold in the very good company of Roosevelt, Eisenhower, Truman, Stalin and Churchill. Campbell was at the White House when word was received of the attack on Pearl Harbor, Bull said. Campbell had a front row seat at war's end as well.

"One of the great events of my life was at the end of World War II," Bull said. He was a corporal in the Army infantry in southern Germany when his commanding officer handed him a telegram and asked with suspicion, "What's this all about?" The telegram read, "Meet me in Munich, Wednesday noon at the Excelsior hotel for a reunion, signed, Uncle Tom, Colonel U.S. Airforce." Both Bull and his superior looked at each other in amazement as they saw that it had been countersigned by none other than Dwight D. Eisenhower. And the location of the sender? The Potsdam Conference.

It was during that war that Campbell's North Dakota know-how established him as a problem solver. His experience of farming in the relentless prairie winds aided him during his first assignment from Roosevelt. He was asked to find a way to keep sand from getting in U.S. military vehicle engines in North Africa. He also engineered a way for allied fighter planes to land safely on the boggy ground of the jungles of Burma. During the disastrous partially because he only lived to be 40. But Campbell-Knapp and Bull agree that their grandfather and grandmother, Elizabeth, were integral cogs in early Grand Forks history. They were among an adventurous group of Eastern families including Budge, Titus, McClairon and Witcome who helped settle this area. Weekly intellectual gatherings were held at the Bull residence where the friends would read and talk together about the world's events. University of North Dakota President Webster Merrifield, a friend of the Bulls, was often present.

Cream of Wheat was only in its infancy when George Bull died in 1898 as a result of overwork in getting the company started. Elizabeth Bull and her four small children were nearly penniless with the exception of small dividends from the young Cream of Wheat stock. Merrifield corresponded with the young widow by mail after she moved back East to live with relatives. A few years later, she decided to wed Merrifield. By this time, the company had started to prosper and it was Cream of Wheat money that built the president's mansion on campus. It was by her design that the mansion took shape and so it seemed fitting that nearly 60 years later the granddaughter named after her should come to the rescue of the ailing Oxford House. In the late 1960s the house was scheduled for demolition. But Campbell-Knapp provided the fuel for a movement of interested people to renovate the mansion with a gift of $37,000 and an order to at least paint and do the basic exterior work before everything disintegrated.

The trip back to UND for her father's Hall of Fame induction was Campbell-Knapp's first look at the living museum, now the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center.

"My immediate reaction was that it was an absolutely beautiful job of restoration," said Campbell-Knapp of the house her grandmother built and in which her mother grew up. "Love is maybe too big a word, but you had the feeling that someone had put their heart into this and it has come out beautifully."

Although she had not spent any time there as a child, Campbell-Knapp said "I could envision my family around the table." Her mother and aunt spoke often about the interesting guests that stayed at the mansion and how they loved and respected their stepfather,

The world saw Thomas Campbell as the Henry Ford of agriculture

upon for agricultural advice by world leaders including Stalin who asked Campbell to help in the first five-year plan of the Soviet Union. The world looked upon him as the Henry Ford of agriculture for developing mass-production farming. He is credited with converting surplus Army vehicles into heavy duty farm equipment. Dwight D. Eisenhower once remarked of Campbell's achievements that it was the "most remarkable swords to plowshares job I southern Italy campaign, troop vehicles were pinned down in the muddy countryside. Bull explained that his uncle's solution was flotation tires and he lobbied American tire manufacturers and Congress to produce them, but was met with corporate apathy. It was a short range problem in the view of tire companies and it didn't seem profitable to change their massive production blueprints.

Less is known about George Bull,

Elizabeth Ann Campbell-Knapp had her first look this summer at the restoration of her mother's childhood home that is now the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center. Her grandmother, Elizabeth Bull Merrifield, built the UND President's mansion with money earned on Cream of Wheat stock. Campbell-Knapp contributed the initial donation to restore the old house.

Alumni House was home for Elizabeth Bull's grandmother

Webster Merrifield. "He was a fountain of knowledge to them."

Campbell-Knapp and her husband, J. Merrill Knapp, live in Princeton, N.J. She is a retired president of the Campbell Farm Corp. and is currently organizing her father's papers for historical reference. Her husband is a retired professor and conductor of music at Princeton University.

Bull is a retired senior vice president of Nabisco and lives in Greenwich, Conn., where he is a sculptor and community volunteer. Cream of Wheat joined Nabisco in 1961.

HOMECOMING '86

CATCH THE SPIRIT

LEFT: Serving as Grand Marshal of the Homecoming Parade was Fritz Pollard, '39. Accompanying him was his wife, Addie.

Brisk falls days were the fare for Homecoming '86 Oct. 2-4 at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks. Alumni, friends and students joined in numerous activities ranging from reunions to a parade, from banquets to classroom lectures.

Conducting classroom lectures or discussion sessions were the three Sioux Award winners: Allen Olson, '61, '63, Virginia Ward, '66, and Leon Wiltse, M.D., '37, '38. They accepted their alma mater's highest honor during the Sioux Awards banquet Friday evening at the Westward Ho. Also wearing a temporary teacher's hat, and delivering the keynote address at the Presidents Club dinner, was Jim Haugen, '55.

The Homecoming parade on Saturday had numerous entries and lots of enthusiasm from participants and observers. The football game did not fare as well as the parade with the Sioux losing to Mankato State University 10-43.

Unique among reunions was the gathering of the football teammates of 1936-1939 who came from all over the country to join classmate and friend, Fritz Pollard Jr., '39. Pollard was honored during the Homecoming celebration on the 50th anniversary of his feats during the 1936 Olympics (see related story this issue).

Topping the festivities was the All-Alumni Party at the Westward Ho Saturday night, possibly the biggest party of the year in Grand Forks.

Promoting Sioux spirit in the Homecoming Parade was this float built by Delta Delta Delta sorority and Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

Visiting with guests prior to the Presidents Club Dinner was keynote speaker Jim Haugen, '55, of West Bloomfield, Mich. Haugen, vice president of Automotive Assembly and Robot Vehicle Systems at GMF, a division of General Motors, spoke about the future of robotics in manufacturing.

Homecoming ceremonies at the Beta Theta Pi fraternity included a special presentation honoring alumnus Don Loopp, '48, Petoskey, Mich., for his active involvement and staunch loyalty toward the Gamma Kappa chapter. Making the presentation is Beta Theta Pi active and Loopp recruit, Gar Atchison, also of Petoskey, Mich.

Posing in front of the elaborate hors d'oeuvre table at the traditional All Alumni Party are members of the host committee. Walter Klick, '24, Hebron, was recognized with the Alumni Leadership Award for dedicated service to UND during the Sioux Awards banquet Friday, October 3. Klick is pictured here with his wife, Irene, along with Alumni Association President Charles R. Johnson.

Homecoming was more than fun and games, as indicated by this meeting of the Alumni Leadership Council Oct. 3.

Stella Pollock (second from left) received the Elwyn B. Robinson Award this fall from the UND Alumni Association for her many years of work with philanthropic groups around North Dakota. Pollock also was a driving force in the building of an all-faiths chapel at the International Peace Garden. Among those attending a reception at the Alumni Center in Pollock's honor were Louise Aandahl Stockman, '48, president of the UND Foundation (left), JoAnne Bridston Hedlin, '51, immediate past president of the UND Alumni Association (second from right) and Rita Roach Traynor, '51, former member of the Alumni Association and Foundation Board of Directors.

Al Hartl, '32, received the "For God and Youth Medal" from the National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry of the United States Catholic Conference. It is the first time the honor was given to a diocesan layman. Presented by the National Catholic Committee on Scouting, the medal recognizes Hartl's volunteer service to scouting under Catholic sponsorship.

Visiting the UND campus this fall was Ver-se Frazier Gaines, '23, daughter of former North Dakota Gov. Lynn Frazier, '01. Ver-se and her twin sister, Unie Frazier Church, were named after the University of North Dakota by their parents who were long recognized for their loyalty to their alma mater.

New religion center proposed for UND

By SUE BERG

A grant of $650,000 will be provided by the Wesley Center of Religion to construct a new campus ministry center at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks.

Pastor John Jarman, '66, '84, has been spearheading a million dollar campaign project to build the ecumenical United Campus Ministry Center on the UND campus between the former Wesley College buildings, now Robinson-Sayre and Corwin-Larimore Halls.

The North Dakota Board of Higher Education approved a 99 year, renewable lease.

"Getting the lease to this property along University Avenue was significant to the project," Jarman said. "The land was once owned by the Methodist Wesley College. Many UND alumni may have fond memories of attending classes at Wesley College."

The million dollar campaign includes $650,000 to erect the building, $100,000 for furnishings and $250,000 for an endowment for maintenance and utilities.

"We're gearing into the final phase of our fund-raising campaign, and we plan to conclude at the end of the year," Jarman said.

The project gained impetus when the Episcopal Church sold the present United Campus Ministry Center, Canterbury House, to the University.

Construction on the new center is expected to begin late this spring. The plans for the structure have been drawn by Myron Denbrook of Engineers-

Architects PC of Grand Forks. The design features three square sections arranged to form a triangle, with the sanctuary at the top. The section to the lower left includes the resident's apartment, a nursery, recreation and seminar rooms, and a kitchen. The section to the lower right includes the pastor's offices, meeting rooms, a library and a chapel.

Several alumni and friends are active in the project, including Niomi Phillips, '61, Sharon Branvold, '81, Scott Williams, '84, Robert Boyd, '74, '79, Sharon Rezac-Andersen, '73, Stacie Varnson, '77, Lloyd Jarman, '58, Gordon Henry, '66, Eldon Gade, Linda Bates, '70, David Knecht, '50, Ed Lander, '43, and Darylne Hariman, '47.

Anyone interested in further information on the project can contact Jarman at 2924 University Ave., Grand Forks, ND 58202 or call (701) 775-4616.

Foundation news

Vito Perrone Scholarship Endowment

The Vito Perrone Scholarship Endowment has been established by faculty members of the UND Center for Teaching and Learning honoring Vito Perrone who served as dean from 1968 to 1986. Perrone has taken a position with the Carnegie Institute for the Advancement of Teaching.

The recipients of the scholarship will be graduate and undergraduate students who are serious students of educational scholarship and intend to pursue a professional career in education.

"Under the leadership of Vito Perrone, the Center for Teaching and Learning at UND achieved national prominence and recognition," said Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Alumni Association and Foundation. "We are pleased to play a role in motivating outstanding students in the field of education to follow in his footsteps."

Charles Henry Waldren Memorial Scholarship

The Charles Henry Waldren Memorial Scholarship Fund was established by Mrs. Charles (Delores) Waldren of Houston, and her children through personal and Exxon matching gifts to the University of North Dakota Foundation.

A native of Cavalier, N.D., Waldren graduated from UND in 1954 with a bachelor of science degree in geology. As a student, he received the W. A. Tarr Award by the Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Gamma Epsilon for his work in earth sciences. He also was awarded the Beaver Lodge Oil Corp. Award in geology for writing the best paper on preliminary investigation of fossils in the Winnipeg Formation.

At the time of his death, Waldren was senior exploration geologist for Exxon Co., Houston, a company he was devoted to for 30 years. During his professional career with Exxon, he developed his expertise for seismic stratigraphy, creating a large portion of the seismic stratigraphic concepts that gave Exxon a sound understanding of the Atlantic offshore regional geology. Waldren's mapping knowledge led to a gas discovery which has the potential to become one of the larger fields in the offshore Gulf of Mexico.

Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Alumni Association and Foundation said, "We are pleased to administer this scholarship in honor of Charles Waldren. This scholarship will assist outstanding and deserving students to pursue productive careers in the field of geology following the example set by Charles in his lifetime."

News briefs

The National Science Foundation awarded a matching grant of $3 million to promote basic science research for a five-year period at the University of North Dakota and North Dakota State University.

The matching grant was awarded to the North Dakota State Board of Higher Education by the NSF Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (EPSCoR). EPSCoR grants are awarded to states that receive the least amount of NSF and federal funding to bring research up to a nationally competitive level.

North Dakota is among seven states and Puerto Rico to receive EPSCoR awards.

In matching the grant, the Board committed $400,000 for the first year of research and authorized UND and NDSU to incorporate $1.3 million each into their budgets from 1987 to 1991.

The projects that will be supported by EPSCoR initially at UND are chemical reactivity and catalysis, cellular and molecular biology, and biotic resources; at NDSU, they are laser spectroscopy and polymers, regulatory biosciences, and mathematical modeling and computational methods.

Hetherington leaves $100,000 for scholarships

ago," noted Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Foundation. "But in her typical style, she was impatient to begin helping students, and since 1974 awarded from other sources the annual scholarships which now will be continued through the Mary Elizabeth Hetherington Memorial Endowment."

The awards established during her lifetime include the Alpha Chi Omega Fine Arts Scholarships, for members of Hetherington's campus sorority who have chosen to major in music, visual arts or theatre, and the Logan-Hetherington Memorial Medical Award for School of Medicine students.

Hetherington's testamentary gift will continue the Logan-Hetherington Memorial Medical Award. It also will fund the Hetherington Fine Arts Scholarship for majors in the College of Fine Arts and a separate Hetherington Alpha Chi Omega Scholarship for members of her sorority, regardless of major. In addition, a substantial portion of the bequest and endowment will support a number of scholarships for students within the University community as a whole.

"Mary was a self-made woman, far ahead of her time," said her friend and sorority sister, Louise Edwards, '27, of Bismarck. "In her last years, all her energies and thoughts were for the University, Alpha Chi and education. She was the force that kept the Alpha Chi alumnae together here in Bismarck."

Hetherington, who was born at St. Thomas, N.D., and grew up in Grand Forks, was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of UND.

She received a master's degree in journalism at Northwestern University, and did additional graduate work at the University of London.

She taught school at Turtle Lake, N.D., Grafton, N.D., and Mankato, Minn., before joining the Saginaw, Mich., system in 1930, where she worked until retirement in 1969.

During World War II, Hetherington found time to serve as a volunteer fireman in the Saginaw City Fire Department, and eventually was chief of women's civil defense volunteers for the state of Michigan.

Among her citations, she was most proud of the 1963 Saginaw High School yearbook, dedicated in her honor.

"Mary Elizabeth Hetherington had a great pride in her alma mater, her home state and her sorority," Strinden said. "She dedicated most of her life to education, and her testamentary gift will continue in perpetuity her commitment to young people and to educational excellence."

#3 FINANCIAL UPDATE

A monthly report on planned giving from the UND Foundation

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 will affect all of us.

These are three provisions of the Tax Bill:

CHARITABLE DEDUCTION
1986 — Your gift made to the UND Foundation is 100% deductible, even if you don't itemize your deductions for this year.
1987 — The charitable deduction for non-itemizers will be repealed, while those who itemize may experience reduced savings because of lower tax rates.

LOWER TAX RATES
1986 — Because your personal tax rate will be lower next year, the deduction allowed for your gift will be more valuable in 1986.
1987 — Lower tax rates mean less savings from contribution deductions, but the vast majority of our alumni and friends will have the use of more of their income and an enhanced opportunity to make a gift.

GIFTING APPRECIATED PROPERTY FOR ANNUITY INCOME
1986 — By making a life income gift annuity involving appreciated property before December 31, 1986, donors can take full advantage of the 60% capital gains exclusion, and therefore receive more tax-free income.
1987 — A gift annuity arrangement with the UND Foundation will still be a very viable and beneficial planning tool, however the new tax law will eliminate the favorable tax considerations for capital gains on appreciated property.

For more detailed information on how the Tax Reform Act may affect your planned giving goals for 1987, please return this coupon to our Foundation office.

Beating the Bison: still one of the best football feelings in the world!

A bison is carved on one side of the Nickel Trophy, and the face of a Sioux fills the other side. UND and NDSU football teams battle for the trophy each fall.

By TRACY BRIGGS

A Sioux. A Bison. One hundred years ago these two epitomized struggle on the prairie. Today, they epitomize struggle on the football field.

The University of North Dakota Fighting Sioux and the North Dakota State University Bison have been struggling against each other since 1894. In that first game, NDSU won, beating UND 20-4.

As the competition continues, Lee Bohnet, UND sports information director, says the rivalry remains healthy. He says UND-NDSU football games are "very intense because they carry with them state bragging rights."

The popularity of the game is obvious. UND-NDSU games usually pull the biggest crowds of the season for both schools. In fact, 1983's game in Fargo tied an NDSU all-time record with 14,800 people attending.

Perhaps part of the popularity may be credited to the rich traditions which surround this gridiron battle.

Today's NDSU students still sing the "University, University" song which emphasizes NDSU's superiority over the "outhouse" up north and UND students still call NDSU "Moo U" and "Cow College."

Word of mouth also keeps competition strong. Mark Herstrom, a 1985 Sioux offensive tackle, said when he first came to UND he hadn't even heard of the UND-NDSU battle. But that changed. According to Herstrom, the desire to beat the Bison became very apparent.

"Right when I walked into the locker room I could feel it. It's a contagious feeling surrounding the whole team."

Many times this attitude is conveyed to prospective players. Ryan Bakken, sports editor of the Grand Forks Herald, says he's talked to UND recruits.

"They get told that if you're only going to win one game all year... beat NDSU."

The most visual reminder of North Dakota's continuing battle of the universities is the Nickel Trophy. Larger than a regular nickel by 25,000 times and weighing 75 pounds, the trophy is an exact replica of a once-minted United States coin bearing an Indian head on one side and a buffalo on the other. Robert Kunkel, '38, created the trophy in 1937. Jack Sather, '37, was the sculptor. Since 1938 the trophy has been awarded to the winner of the Bison-Sioux football duel. It is currently in the possession of the Bison.

The trophy inspires not only pride and embarrassment but also a little bit of mischief. It has been the subject of many campus thefts and raids.

Over-anxious students began stealing the trophy even before it made its first appearance at UND's Homecoming in 1937. UND's president at the time, John West, awoke Homecoming morning with the stolen coin on his front porch.

Another tradition, occasionally ignored, has the student body president of the losing team losing his or her pants to the winner.

Sometimes the football rivalry has been less than fun or friendly. In 1903, UND officials charged NDSU with using three ineligible players. The teams patched things up by 1904 only to break relations again in 1907 when the two schools started bickering over various rules and practices surrounding the game. The squabbles lasted until 1909 and were well publicized in all of the local papers. Finally, in 1910, the schools settled their differences.

In 1911, the game was cancelled because of a blizzard. In 1918 the UND Board of Regents called off the game and later the entire football schedule because the Spanish flu epidemic killed 29 students. In 1943 and 1944 both schools cancelled sports because of World War II.

Of the 90 games the Bison and Sioux football teams have played, the Sioux lead the series 52-35-3. The Bison have won every game since 1981. The Sioux have the longest victory streak: 12 games from 1953 to 1964.

The Bison-Sioux competition also is the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division II's oldest rivalry. This year, the UND Fighting Sioux will face the NDSU Bison at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 15, at the UND Memorial Stadium. The 91st game between the universities is literally the final battle of the season.

President Reagan at UND

A separate platform and a press center accommodated more than 300 national and local journalists covering the event. ABC, NBC, CBS and CNN sent their television crews. Network correspondent Sam Donaldson was among the celebrity journalists impatiently waiting for the president's speech.

In one section of the balcony, a deaf signer transcribed the words from the speaker's platform. Another balcony section was reserved for students from Thompson, N.D., high school. President Reagan could not accept their invitation to visit, but made sure that a few of the students would have a chance to see him.

About 150 Young Astronauts, all elementary school children, flanked one side of a front-row view of the president.

The program prior to the president's address featured Dick King and his Classic Swing Band, the Valley Troubadours from Valley City, N.D., the Twin Forks chapter of Sweet Adelines, and the UND Varsity Bards and Marching Band. Carl Eller, former Minnesota Viking great, was also on the program, speaking to the audience which included a large number of high school and grade school students about the danger of drugs.

And then the president walked out. It was only his second appearance since the Iceland mini-summit. Much of the president's speech was political rhetoric in support of Sen. Andrews, but delivered in a masterful way that had even opponents smiling broadly at his public speaking skill.

The speech did contain some news of national substance, however. All three networks, for example, carried reports on Reagan's post-summit defense of his Strategic Defense Initiative, comparing it in significance to the British development of radar on the eve of World War II. He spoke about farm aid legislation (and privately met with a dozen North Dakota farmers to discuss their concerns).

He offered a message from his

"roommate," Nancy Reagan.

"When it comes to drugs, just say no," Reagan said.

In opening his speech, Reagan used a long-time Red River Valley joke from President Clifford: "North Dakota is different country. The rivers run north and the Irish vote Republican." The crowd cheered, the first of numerous occasions during the speech.

Reagan obviously enjoyed the crowd. They enjoyed him.

The day brought back memories to many of Sept. 25, 1963, when President John F. Kennedy addressed another huge crowd at the fieldhouse. Former President Richard Nixon also spoke in the building as vice president and as a private citizen. During his first term as president, Nixon spoke in Grand Forks at an airport rally. In 1937, President Franklin Roosevelt visited the campus.

President Reagan's appearance was over quickly. To the thrill of the crowd, Andrews presented to Reagan a UND Sioux hockey jersey. On the front were the words "North Dakota" and the emblem of the Sioux face. On the back were the words "Mr. President," and the number 1. The president looked pleased.

The senator escorted the president off the platform, and those standing nearby had one final thrill. Reagan caught one of the 10,000 balloons that tumbled over the platform, and threw it into the crowd.

Air Force One left with the president and the senator from Mark Andrews International Airport, where it had landed.

Later, those closest to the president passed the word that Reagan was willing to stay longer if time had permitted it. In an era when political hoopla is often staged, Reagan said he sensed a genuine warmth in the response he received from the crowd at UND.
