ALUMNI REVIEW

A Century of Alumni Tradition and Pride

Business college accredited

*Graduate and undergrad programs approved;
Significant alumni assistance provided*

The University of North Dakota College of Business and Public Administration received accreditation for its Master of Business Administration (MBA) program, and reaccreditation for its undergraduate business programs.

The announcement was made at the annual meeting of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) in San Francisco in April. UND School of Business and Public Administration Dean W. Fred Lawrence, attended the meeting.

"Having AACSB accreditation is really a seal of approval regarding overall program quality," Lawrence said. "That quality image should make it easier to attract quality students and faculty. In addition it should improve job opportunities for graduates."

Of the approximately 1,500 business programs offered in the United States, about 240 are accredited at the undergraduate and graduate levels. UND has the only accredited business programs in North Dakota at any level. The University of Minnesota in Minneapolis and St. Cloud State are the two schools in Minnesota which have accredited business programs.

The AACSB revisits accredited schools on a regular basis to ensure that they have remained in compliance with accreditation standards. UND's business college will be revisited for the first time in 1995-96.

Lawrence said accreditation was achieved with significant assistance from UND alumni. In addition to individual alumni support, substantial financial contributions were given to the College of Business and Public Administration through the UND Foundation.

This included individual gifts to the Foundation's Annual Sustaining Drive and gifts through endowments within the UND Foundation. The support included $38,000 in research grants to faculty in the accounting department, purchases of 150 computers for use by both faculty and students, and faculty salary enhancement, development and recruitment.

Allocations were made from the following UND Foundation Endowments: William and Louise Seifert, Lutheran Brotherhood, Hugo Magnuson Family, Katun Corporation, Grangaard First Bank, G. Richard Chater, Earl Larson and First National Bank Grand Forks.

Thank you for another successful UND alumni year

By Earl Strinden
Executive Vice President
UND Alumni Association

Thanks to a large number of loyal and dedicated alumni and special friends, we are closing the books on another successful year. The missions of our Association, as they were handwritten in the by-laws 101 years ago, remain inviolate. The UND Alumni Association was organized so, classmates and friends could be in life-long contact with each other and be informed about happenings at their university. The members of the first graduating class also wanted a formalized structure for involving alumni and friends in the ongoing building of the University of North Dakota.

The staff and Board of Directors are very cognizant of these historic mis-

The development committee reviewed a positive report regarding this year's Annual Drive, increased membership in our UND Foundation giving clubs, and a growing number of planned giving arrangements. We now administer a record number of 356 named endowments. Our assets are at a record level and our financial records department administers over 1,000 accounts to facilitate alumni and other private giving to benefit virtually every college, department and activity at UND. The UND Foundation is the umbrella for the support of the total university.

The investment committee of the Board reviewed the performance of our investment portfolio, which showed an annualized total return in excess of 18 percent for the past five years. We take very seriously our fiduciary responsibilities as trustee for a growing number of arrangements benefiting alumni, friends and UND.

We never forget those who "toiled in the vineyards" in the earlier and building years of this university. So many individuals overcame great obstacles, made many sacrifices and provided dedicated and unselfish service. We are building on this solid base which others provided. We always, however, go back to June 13, 1889, and the missions written by the founders of the UND Alumni Association.

Thank you and Congratulations!

Four Board members have completed the maximum three three-year terms and are leaving the Board. We have benefited greatly from their leadership and active involvement. The 21 elected members of the Board serve without any reimbursement. The success of the Alumni Association and Foundation is directly attributable to a strong Board of Directors. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to retiring Board members Frank Bavendick of Bismarck; Gerald Van Eckhout of Golden, Colo.; Glenn Geiger of White Plains, N.Y.; and Louise Aandahl Stockman of Fargo. Also thank you to Ray Kobe for serving a three-year term. Ray was unable to stand for re-election because of business commitments. He lives in West Bloomfield, Mich.

At the annual meeting of the Alumni Association on Thursday, May 24, five individuals were elected to a first term on the Board of Directors. These are Richard Becker, '64, of Englewood, Colo.; Shirley Blanchard Colgrove, '62, of Houston, Texas; Robert Heskin, '60, of Bismarck; R. Douglas Larsen, '53 of Fargo, and Gary Marsden, '63, of St. Cloud, Minn. Re-elected for a third term were Tom Davidson, '43, of Williston, N.D., and Donn Osmon, '55, of St. Paul, Minn. We offer our thanks and congratulations to these individuals. There is no doubt our tradition of active Board member involvement and dedicated service will continue.

A Tribute and Thank You to President Tom Clifford

At Homecoming 1990, we will celebrate a thank you and tribute to President Tom Clifford. There will be a big banquet on Saturday, Oct. 20, in the Grand Forks Civic Auditorium. This will be followed by the All-Alumni Party. We are dedicating Homecoming '90 to Tom. His service to UND is uncommon and exemplary.

I don't know if there is another college or university in the nation where the president has such a long-standing record of service. For Tom this goes back to the late 1930s when he came from Langdon, N.D., to enter

UND. All of his adult life has been spent here, except for his World War II years of service in the U.S. Marine Corps and his advanced degree work at Stanford University. After the war, he came back to UND to be an instructor in Accounting and Business Law. He rose to the rank of professor, served as chairman of the department, and then as dean of the School of Business. He was the Vice President for Finance under President George Starcher. When George Starcher retired on June 30, 1971, Tom Clifford became UND's eighth president. Tom has two degrees from UND—a B.S. degree in 1942 and a Juris Doctorate in 1948. Tom has been very active in community and volunteer service. In his illustrious career he has made friends with thousands. This thank you and tribute to Tom Clifford will make Homecoming '90 a very special occasion. Please make your plans and reservations early.

Have an enjoyable summer season! If your summer travels bring you on or near the campus, please do stop by the Alumni Center for a visit. Remember the coffee pot is always on and the welcome mat is out.

Report from campus

sions. At the June 7-8 spring board meeting on the UND campus, we critiqued our alumni relations and development programs and also worked on plans to make the 1990-91 year even more successful. The reports to the Board were positive. We just recently completed one of the most successful Alumni Days in our history. Our ambitious schedule of on- and off-campus alumni events collectively involve several thousand alumni. In this Review you will be reading about plans for Homecoming 1990, and in the near future we will be publishing our nation-wide schedule of alumni reunions. We continue to receive many favorable letters about the Alumni Review and ideas for future articles, as well as information for our newnotes section.

We can proudly report our computerized records system is one of the best for any Alumni Association of our size in the nation. Our records department is keeping track of more than 100,000 records, with over 70,000 alumni on the active mailing list.

The alumni relations committee of the Board received a report from Telesis, the Student Alumni Association, in which plans were discussed for expanded interaction between students and UND alumni during the coming year.

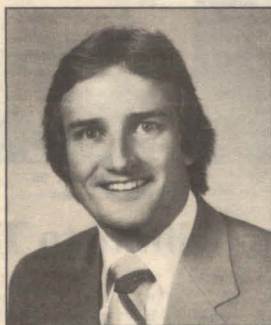

Marti joins Alumni development staff

William J. Marti has joined the UND Alumni Association and Foundation staff as a development officer.

Marti, a Grand Forks native, received his BS degree in education in 1969. He was previously employed as director of development for The Village Family Service Center, a private, statewide human service agency headquartered in Fargo, and prior to that was the director of development for the Catholic Diocese of Fargo.

Marti and his wife Kerry (Kroeber), '72, have two children.

Earl Strinden, executive vice president of the UND Alumni Association, said, "We are delighted to have Bill Marti join the UND development team. Bill and Kerry are truly coming home, as their family roots are deep here. Bill's father, the late Len Marti, served UND for many years as a teacher, head of the physical education department and as athletic director. Kerry's father, Gordon, retired recently as assistant to the President for facilities.

"Bill brings experience, talent and a great deal of dedication to the UND Alumni Association, and we are happy to have him on our staff."

This happy group took advantage of a beautiful May afternoon on the banks of the English coulee to celebrate its "Zero-Year Reunion." These students, who were to graduate May 13, gathered for their first of what is hoped to be many enjoyable UND alumni events. The reunion was a project of Dave Vorland's advanced public relations class and was co-sponsored by the UND Alumni Association and the local K-Lite radio station. The Class of 1990 also began a tradition on campus which it hopes future classes will continue. Classmates planted two mountain ash trees in front of Leonard Hall. A plaque near the trees identifies them as a gift from the class. UND had a total of 1,847 graduates receive degrees in the general spring commencement ceremonies May 11. They included 198 Master's degrees and 198 doctoral degrees. In separate commencement ceremonies, the UND Medical School graduated 51 students and the UND Law School graduated 58 students.

Hagan receives Elwyn Robinson Award

Doctor's childhood play area now restored historic sites

By Andrea Winkler Collin

As a young boy, Dr. Edward Hagan played around the sites of two 19th century forts near his hometown of Williston, N.D., and heard stories of the colorful personalities who lived there and the frontier adventures that happened there.

They were Fort Union Trading Post -- a fur trading post of national prominence, and Fort Buford -- a military post. Both were located near the confluence of the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers, 25 miles south-west of Williston.

Both forts had closed by the time Hagan was born, but because his family was acquainted with the Mercer family -- the caretakers of the Fort Buford property -- Hagan spent many days exploring those sites.

"The area was interesting and intriguing to all of us," he recalled. "But since Fort Buford had most recently closed down, I heard more stories about it than about Fort Union."

In 1925, at the age of nine, Hagan was present at the Upper Missouri Historical Societies Expedition held at the confluence area and attended by as many as 8,000 people.

The expedition was headed up by James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, and brought train cars of people to join government officials, Indians and area residents. The expedition recalled the area's history and recognized area Indian chiefs and their families. Among those attending was the renowned artist of the Old West, Charles Russell. Because the Great Northern train was routed through the confluence area, the railroad took a great interest in preserving that history.

Hagan, the son of a pioneer Williston doctor, received a Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of North Dakota in 1939 and a Bachelor of Science in medicine a year later. He completed his medical education at Rush Medical at the University of Chicago in 1942, and, after serving in the U.S. Navy in World War II, returned to Williston to practice medicine for the next 40 years. (His son, Mike, graduated in May from UND's Medical School, and his daughter Katie Keogh received her degree in physical therapy from UND in 1974.)

His interest in the history of the area continued throughout his life. But soon after retiring from practicing medicine in 1985, Hagan enthusiastically took on another nearly full-time position, that of chairing the area-wide group called Friends of Fort Union Trading Post. This group had been organized a few years earlier to promote further restoration and development of the Missouri-Yellowstone confluence area.

By then, Fort Union had been made a National Park Service national historical site, and Fort Buford had become part of the State Historical Society of North Dakota.

Hagan became chairman of Friends of Fort Union at a time when federal funding to restore and perhaps reconstruct Fort Union had recently become a reality. This was because extensive efforts by area residents and Members of Congress were successful in moving the project up to a higher priority for funding.

The funding was conditional upon supplemental local matching funds being raised by the Friends of Fort Union. Since 1986 the Bourgeois (Manager's) House, the palisades and bastions have been reconstructed. Plans are underway to complete reconstruction of the fort's Indian trade house by the end of this year.

Improvements have also been made at nearby Fort Buford, including a major renovation of the museum.

Hagan's eyes light up when he speaks of the progress that has been made at the confluence area, its further potential and the tourism impact it is having on northwestern North Dakota. "We have two remarkable rivers there," he said. "The Yellowstone and Missouri Rivers are the largest watershed in the United States above Independence, Mo."

"The confluence area has 185 years of continuous recorded history, which not many areas this far west have," Hagan said. History was first recorded in 1805 when Lewis and Clark visited the confluence's north bank of the Missouri River.

Fort Union now has a permanent repository of materials, written and otherwise, pertaining to the history of the early American fur trade and nine-to-one match the National Park Service requested for the reconstruction of Fort Union.

"This challenge was met with a lot of determination by area residents," Hagan said. "This was at a time when the area's economy wasn't the best with agriculture and oil -- the area's two economic mainstays -- both depressed. But in spite of that, we raised more than $500,000 -- $126,000 in cash and the rest as in-kind contributions."

John Jacob Astor VIII, a descendant of the Fort Union's original owner, came to Williston from his home in England to offer his help on the project. Astor arranged for a fund-raising social at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York City for the project in September of 1987, which Hagan attended. Astor also commissioned an oil-painting of Fort Union by well-known English artist Robert Bach, and prints were sold to raise money for Fort Union. The original painting now hangs in Astor's Hever Castle in London.

Hagan was recognized for his efforts at a Williston-area alumni reunion April 30 when he was presented with the Elwyn B. Robinson Award.

He is the fifth recipient of this award, which recognizes individuals who have distinguished themselves through their work in preserving the heritage of North Dakota. It's named in memory of Dr. Elwyn B. Robinson, a professor of history at UND for more than 35 years.

He said he accepted the award on behalf of all the people, past and present, who have worked so hard to bring the Missouri-Yellowstone confluence area back to life. "Something like this doesn't happen without a lot of cooperation by a lot of people over many years."

UND Foundation Charitable Income Arrangements offer

Simplicity - easy to arrange!
Security - lifetime income!
Satisfaction - of supporting UND!

"I enthusiastically recommend a charitable life income arrangement with the UND Foundation. I liked my first one so much, I now have SIX more!"

Carl Haugen, '29, and a growing number of alumni and friends have discovered a UND Foundation charitable income arrangement to be good for them.

He believes it also could be good for YOU, and we agree!

One of 15 in country

White's job is 'styling' food

By Heather Steff, '89

If there is one label that best describes Karen Sethre White, '59, it is "mom" and it is a label she is very proud to wear.

A successful food stylist and recipe developer, White is one of about 15 people in the country who work creating those wonderful, too-good-to-eat creations that appear in magazines, on television, and on product packaging.

In addition to working with many New York advertising agencies, White has worked for clients such as General Foods, Durkee-French, Rums of Puerto Rico, Bon Appetit, and M & M Candies. She is one of the best in her field.

In honor of her success, the Northwood, N.D., native received the Sioux Award, the University of North Dakota Alumni Association's highest honor, during the 1989 Homecoming celebration.

Not surprisingly, White made the trip back to her alma mater a family affair. Her two daughters, her son, her mother, and an aunt accompanied her.

For White, this was her first visit to the campus in 30 years. It was also a chance to share a part of her past with her children.

White's roots in the Grand Forks area span two generations. Her grandparents left western Massachusetts and founded and taught for 40 years at the Union Commercial College in Grand Forks.

Her father, the late John Sethre, earned a master's degree in education from UND in 1945 and her mother, Aileen Thacker Sethre, '28, was president of the Delta Gamma sorority when she studied on campus.

Following in her parent's footsteps, White attended UND where she studied home economics and graduated Summa Cum Laude in 1959. Upon graduation, she worked at the Betty Crocker test kitchens for seven years, learning the skills of a food stylist. She quit the day she became engaged to her husband Brian.

While White said she receives a great deal of satisfaction from her career, her family has always come first. "I didn't want to be a working wife and I didn't want to be a working mother," she said.

Following marriage came children and with that a seven-year leave of absence from her career. "I was never really out of practice though," she said. "I cooked for my family and we did a lot of entertaining."

With her youngest child in school, White resumed her career part-time, usually working only two or three days a week on a free-lance basis so that she could still give priority to her children's activities.

According to White, food styling and recipe development require far more than a knack with spices and a creative flair. She has a strong background in chemistry and described that part of her education as extremely helpful.

In addition to this, being good at food styling also takes practice. White, who loves doing cakes and pies, admits that it takes quite a few years to get the hang of making those perfect looking frosting swirls.

White has contributed to McCall's magazine for 16 years and even held the post of associate food editor. During that time she did a feature almost every month.

Now that her children are pursuing careers or attending college, White works almost full-time. Not surprisingly her motive is still largely family-oriented.

"I use part of my income to help with the educational expenses," she said.

M&M/Mars Corp. is presently her biggest client. White writes all of the advertising recipes for them and creates most of the delicious looking concoctions which appear in the advertisements. She recently finished work on M & M's Easter advertising promotion.

Because food styling is such a highly specialized area, White said she can charge $500 a day for her services.

While it may sound easy, it's not.

After the initial meeting with the client, White generally takes about a week to develop recipes. She usually prepares the product in her home and only goes to New York for photography sessions and to show the finished product.

Occasionally she must rent a kitchen at a studio or prepare things on location which can lead to a host of other obstacles such as no water available. Because it takes four hours for her to commute by train to New York from her Ridgefield, Conn., home, White must be up and packed by 5 a.m. on such days. (This is no small achievement for someone who admits she is not a morning person.) Her day then ends between 10 p.m. and midnight when she returns home. If there are any revisions to be made, White repeats the process.

"It's hard work but I love it," she said.

Although she works out of her own kitchen most of the time, White described it as an average kitchen.

"For a long time I even used an old wine bottle for a rolling pin. The only difference between my kitchen and most others is that I have more pans," White said.

When asked how much doctoring food stylists actually do in order to prepare food for the camera, she said that because of truth in advertising regulations, the food -- once it is prepared -- must still be edible.

Of course there is some latitude. For example, according to White, those "picture perfect" turkeys that appear in the Christmas seasonal advertisements are basted with Kitchen Bouquet and egg white to achieve a rich caramel color without beads of fat. The turkeys are then cooked for only one hour in order to avoid shrinkage.

If White's job still sounds easy consider this -- each television commercial "take" requires preparing one complete cake, which means baking as many as 50 cake layers.

As a working mother, White described print advertising as the easiest to do. Now that her children are older she is becoming more interested in television but said she plans to continue working on a free-lance basis because of the flexibility it offers.

'Coya, Come Home'

Alumna, publisher meet through 'UND connection'

By Andrea Winkjer Collin

The "UND connection" entered into the publication of a book written by a University of North Dakota alumna about an Esmond, N.D., native who is the only woman elected to Congress from Minnesota.

"Coya Come Home: A Congresswoman's Journey," was written by Gretchen Urnes Beito, Thief River Falls, Minn., who received a Master's degree in history and English from UND in 1982. It chronicles the life of Coya Knutson, who was elected to the U.S. House on the DFL ticket in 1954.

Knutson, who represented Minnesota's 9th Congressional district, lost a close re-election bid in 1958, after her husband publicly urged her to return to their home in Oklee, Minn., instead of returning to Washington for a third term.

The book's first day of publication was May 17 in Minneapolis, which is Norwegian Independence Day. Beito said that day was chosen because Knutson is of Norwegian descent. Now 77 and living in the Twin Cities, Knutson was present for first-day-of-publication activities.

Beito first wrote about Knutson as the subject for her master's thesis at UND.

"I was interested in how a Northwestern Minnesota woman with no political experience got to Congress," Beito said. When she finished her thesis, Dr. Jerome Tweton, from the UND History Department, told her it would make a good book.

"I told him I didn't have the energy at the time to work on making it into a book," she said.

That all changed when Kathryn Leigh Scott, a Minnesota native who is now an actress and publisher living in Los Angeles, had developed an interest in learning more about Knutson. She contacted Howard Berg, Devils Lake, N.D., who deals in out-of-publication books and asked him to locate anything that had been written about Knutson. The only written piece he could find was Beito's thesis, which was on file at UND's Chester Fritz Library.

After several conversations with Scott, Beito agreed to expand her thesis into a book-length authorized biography to be published by Scott's company, Pomegranate Press.

In her further research, Beito spent a considerable amount of time visiting with Knutson about her candidacy, her experiences in Congress and the events that eventually lead to her defeat.

"I have always enjoyed reading about women who didn't wait to be asked to get involved," Beito said. "And, I know there are many other people who share that same interest. Coya Knutson certainly was one of these women."

Beito visited UND this spring as part of the book's promotion tour, autographed books at the UND Bookstore and was guest of honor at a reception at the president's house, hosted by Mrs. Clifford.

There is interest in making the book into a movie, Beito says. Scott is presently negotiating on a deal for a major studio film, and three well-known actresses -- Glenn Close, Meryl Streep and Jessica Lange -- have expressed an interest in playing the role of Knutson.

The book is available in bookstores across the country this summer -- including the UND Bookstore -- for $19.95, or copies can be ordered for $17.95 through Pomegranate Press Ltd., 12161 Valleyheart Drive, Studio City, CA 91604.

Award-winning division
Creativity, dedication spark
continuing education programs

By Peter Johnson

The "Hidden University" -- that's how dean Robert Boyd likes to refer to his award-winning Division of Continuing Education at the University of North Dakota, one of the best continuing higher education departments of its size in the nation, and one of the least understood divisions on campus.

With an enrollment of more than 20,000 -- that's right, more than 20,000 enrollments -- the virtually self-funding Division of Continuing Education reaches students all over North Dakota, the Midwest, the United States -- even the world.

For instance, in 1988, UND's Division visited 116 North Dakota communities with 609 classes, workshops and seminars for credit, and 54 communities with 234 non-credit activities.

The Division's College for Kids program and its annual International School of Alcohol Studies drew participants from throughout the United States, and its symposiums on synthetic fuels and hypersonic flight attracted scientists from around the globe. The Correspondence Study program has no geographical boundaries, capable of serving an international clientele.

"Most of what we do is continuing to assist people who have already had some college education, and in many cases are professionals," said Boyd. The Division provides higher education courses, as opposed to the more general courses offered through community education programs. "I think, generally speaking, people are surprised by the variety of things we do."

"And by the diversity of our clientele -- from Elderhostel participants to College for Kids students," added Becky Monley, director of the Division's Correspondence Study and Special Programs.

"Our effort is to take the University to the people in non-traditional ways," said Mary Helen Pelton, assistant dean of Continuing Education. "We not only bring UND faculty to the people, but also other experts (nation-wide via telephone)."

With an eye to the future, Continuing Education is looking seriously at getting into the long-distance learning through telecommunications, including interactive television.

"UND is becoming an important institution in long-distance learning in the state," said Boyd. His division is interested in working with other institutions of higher education, public schools and organizations in putting programs together.

That's the kind of creative thinking that has helped make Continuing Education an award-winning division -- creative thinking and the dedication of the Division staff and, perhaps more importantly, the dedication of the faculty.

"Without the faculty, we wouldn't have much to brag about," said Boyd. But every year, more than 130 faculty members sign on to teach extension courses, correspondence courses, teach at the UND Graduate Center in Bismarck, the Grand Forks Air Force Base Resident Center, weekend and week night classes and special programs courses.

Why are so many faculty members interested in teaching continuing education classes? It isn't for the money, said Boyd. "I can't begin to pay them what they're worth."

In fact, aside from some administrative salaries, the use of a building and electricity, the Division of Continuing Education is self-funding -- to the tune of about $1.7 million a year. In fact, the Division contributes $500,000-$600,000 to UND faculty salaries and for housing, food, transportation and communication services. Only 6 to 7 percent of the Division's budget comes from appropriated funds. "People are always surprised to find out how much we do on so little state funding."

So what attracts so many faculty members to the Division? It is their innate desire to teach, to help spread knowledge beyond the doors of the traditional classroom, said Boyd.

"These people are very dedicated to their profession," he said, noting that many instructors drive to the western edges of the state to provide needed classes to professionals who must continue their education to keep certified and current.

There is another lure: the Division of Continuing Education is an award winning proposition. In April 1989, Boyd was named the Outstanding Professional Continuing Educator by the National University Continuing Education Association. And, the Department of Conferences and Institutes under Boyd's division and under the direction of Fred Wittmann, was cited by the National University Continuing Education Association a year ago for two international conferences: "SynOps 88: Opportunities in the Synfuels Industry," and the "International Conference on Hyper-sonic Flight."

Both conferences--sponsored by UND's Energy and Environmental Research Center and the Center for Aerospace Sciences, respectively--were extremely successful, bringing scientists from all over the world to North Dakota.

These are the kinds of activities that help buoy the state's economy, said Boyd. Every year, Conferences and Institutes runs several international and national conferences bringing in new money to the state, and helping expose the state's valuable resources and assets to the world, in addition to providing an educational experience.

The department also provides conferences and institutes for North Dakotans, such as the 15th Annual North Dakota Emergency Management

Medical Care Conference in April and the North Dakota School of Banking last June.

And, the Office of Management and Development provides workshops in supervisory and communication skills throughout the year in the Grand Forks, Bismarck and Fargo areas.

But there is more to Continuing Education than Conferences and Institutes. The division's units and programs include:

Extension Classes

Extension classes are intended to meet the needs of a variety of individuals: those who can't leave home after finishing high school to continue their formal education; those who have had their education interrupted; those who would like to broaden their professional and cultural background and those who are working toward an advanced degree.

Weekend College/ Learning After Hours

These two programs, shirttail cousins of the Extension Classes, were created in 1988 to fulfill the needs of full time workers in the Red River Valley region who want to work toward a college degree, but who can't or don't want to cut into their working hours on weekdays, according to Boyd.

As the names suggest, Weekend College and Learning After Hours allows full time workers to take required freshman and sophomore level courses on weekends and during evening hours.

Correspondence Study

"Correspondence Study is anything but just sitting in front of the television earning easy credits," said Monley. Any Correspondence Study student and will tell you -- studying by mail is a lot of hard work.

It takes self-direction and independence to make the grade by mail, added Boyd.

Correspondence Study offers more than 90 courses from 23 UND departments. Both credit and non-credit college level courses are available, and almost all courses are prepared and taught by members of the University of North Dakota faculty.

University of Mid-America

Along with the other higher education institutions in North Dakota, the University of North Dakota is a member of the state consortium, the University of Mid-America/North Dakota. This program offers college credit courses through Prairie Public Television so that persons who cannot come to campus can study in their own homes. Courses are offered primarily in the areas of business and arts and sciences. Grading and awarding credit is by UND or any other participating institution in the state.

College for Kids

This summer enrichment program for elementary and junior high age students has grown rapidly in the last five years.

In its first year, 1984, there were 12 students in the College for Kids program. In 1989, more than 450 students from 10 states and two Canadian provinces participated in the two week-long sessions that feature intense courses in such subjects as geography, astronomy, taekwondo, golf, creative music, anthropology, electrical engineering, writing, storytelling, computers, biology and drawing.

Bismarck Graduate Center

While College for Kids serves the state's younger students, the Bismarck Graduate Center promotes a higher level of education for adults in the south-central and southwest portions of the state.

"If the state were going to set up graduate faculty in Bismarck, it would be a very expensive program. Instead, we send professors there, and that's an efficient way to extend graduate study," said Boyd.

Continuing Education: A Key Player

"What we've tried to do is take Continuing Education and have it seen not as a peripheral unit (of the University), but as an important unit," said Boyd. The work is paying off: the Division is being seen as a key player in such projects as UND School of Medicine's Center for Rural Health LEADERS program, designed to help develop community leaders in rural North and South Dakota and the proposed International Business Centers.

The work is also paying off in awards and excellent ratings in program reviews. "One of the things that gives our program credibility is the peer review and awards. As part of the strategic planning in the Division, and on campus, a six-person review team from other states came in last November. We also do a lot of internal work, and the strategic plan for the University calls for that to continue."

It is during such planning sessions -- and during routine brainstorming sessions -- that the Division team really shows its creative energy, according to Monley. The staff gets excited about the potential of the Division, the university, about the possibility of long-distance learning and telecommunications, and about the future.

And with the kind of energy and dedication demonstrated by the Division so far, the future can only be bright.

College for Kids has openings

There are still openings for elementary and junior high students in this summer's College for Kids program.

On Alumni Days '90

More than 200 UND alumni returned to their campus May 23 - 25 to celebrate Alumni Days '90. They met with former classmates and friends to reminisce about their years at UND. Featured reunions were held for the Classes of 1930, 1935 and 1940. Campus tours, socials, dinners, entertainment and a riverboat cruise were among the activities the returning alumni enjoyed.

New Board member Becker's a North Dakota booster

By Heather Steffl '89

If the state of North Dakota had a booster club in Denver, businessman Richard S. Becker would be a prominent member.

Becker, who oversees the worldwide marketing and sales activities as a vice president of ECL Petroleum Technologies, a petroleum engineering software supplier, keeps regular tabs on his home state via the Grand Forks Herald -- just as he's done for the past 25 years. And he rarely misses the Sioux athletic teams when they come to Denver or Greeley.

Becker is one of five new members of the UND Alumni Association Board of Directors, who begin their terms July 1.

His roots run deep. Born in Grand Forks in 1942, the son of Stanley and Lillian Becker, Becker said there was never any doubt about where he would attend college -- even after his family moved to the Minneapolis suburb of St. Louis Park, Minn., just as he was starting eighth grade.

"I grew up playing with Tom Clifford's son and many of my friends were either the children of University of North Dakota professors or of people associated in some way with UND," he said.

While Becker briefly considered majoring in education, he graduated from UND in 1964 with a business administration degree with a major in personnel management.

Since that time, Becker has carved out a distinct place for himself as a corporate executive in the highly specialized petroleum engineering software field -- an expertise that he describes as something of a fluke.

"I'm a non-technical person in a highly specialized field," Becker said.

When Becker graduated from UND he joined Honeywell in Minneapolis to be with his wife, Joanne, who had taken a teaching position there. Later, a major opportunity with Control Data Corp., brought him there as a personnel manager.

"I became interested in sales after hiring sales people....I feel very fortunate because I know that today it would be harder for someone with a less technical background to come in and do what I did," Becker said.

Becker spent almost 13 years with Control Data Corp., (CDC), where he earned many sales distinctions such as becoming the company's top computer services salesman one year and consistently among the top three. In 1975, at age 33, Becker was selected to head CDC's Cybernet Sales operations in Canada, as the youngest regional manager.

Since leaving CDC in 1979, Becker's career path has been anything but predictable. He has worked for four companies including Intera Technologies, Boeing Computer Services, Scientific Software-Intercomp, and United Information Services.

While Becker, his wife, Joanne (Swanson), '64, and their three children have lived in the Minneapolis area during much of his career, the Beckers have also lived in Houston, Denver, Toronto and London, England.

Until the early 1980s they kept in touch annually with family and friends in North Dakota and Minnesota as owners and operators of the Sah-Kah-Tay Beach resort on Minnesota's Cass Lake near Bemidji.

Since moving to the Denver area in 1982, the Beckers have been active in the restaurant business, church activities, and raising their family while continuing visits back to North Dakota.

Becker joined Intera Technologies in 1986 and played a major role in the acquisition of ECL, a London-based petroleum engineering firm. While Intera Technologies is involved in radar remote sensing and environmental consulting, according to Becker, at least half of the company's resources are now devoted specifically to the petroleum industry.

"The ECL group alone accounts for annual revenues in excess of $20 million," he said.

Like many North Dakotans who have followed opportunity to other states, Becker remains interested in economic development programs for North Dakota and maintains that people are the state's greatest resource.

"I don't want to sound pompous," he said, "but my greatest goal would be to make a contribution in the area of employment opportunities for the young people of North Dakota."

In keeping with this attitude, Becker said he is currently encouraging a link between his company's interest in remote sensing and UND's Center for Aerospace Sciences.

Becker, whose son, Keith, is currently attending UND's School of Business, said he is still very impressed with the university relative to other college campuses across the nation.

As for the future, Becker's interest in North Dakota is more than an idle thought. If asked, Becker who describes himself as well-traveled, said, "The thrill of 'bigness' has worn off....The things I tend to notice now are things like pollution, congestion and corruption in contrast to the quality-of-life that can't be beat in North Dakota."

Robertson lives through 40 years of advertising

By Peter Johnson

After 40 years in the business, M. James Robertson knows a thing or two about the world of advertising.

The former director of communications for Monsanto, the international textiles and agricultural chemical company, Robertson now owns his own company, BTB Communications, in Clayton, Mo.

Robertson had retired from Monsanto on April 29, 1988, but that company missed his talents and made him an offer he couldn't resist. He was back to work just three days later, but this time with his own company. Now Robertson's company handles Monsanto's agricultural chemical account as well as for clients John Deere and the Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, Canada, Missouri Southern Seed Corp., and the J.M. Huber Co.

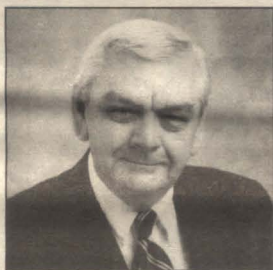

The advertising business has changed since Robertson graduated from the University of North Dakota's Business School of Commerce in 1949. Traditionally, advertising has focused on product features and benefits. Today, advertising focuses much more on the experience of owning an item, said Robertson. "You need to make an emotional appeal. In the future, you'll see more and more 'mood' advertising. The hard-sell era is diminishing."

Niche marketing is another new tendency in the advertising business, said Robertson. Today's advertising is targeted at selected audiences in narrowly defined geography using regional and localized media avenues as well as special interest magazines.

Robertson said his company is in "the traditional media," meaning television, magazines, radio and direct mail. But Robertson said he is doing less and less network advertising and is using more of the non-traditional "rifle power" strategies that go along with niche marketing.

His company is also doing a lot of work on audio-visual assignments, especially developing training and education programs.

The impact of audio-visual images is nothing new to Robertson, who joined Monsanto in New York in 1968, leaving as vice president of McCann-Erickson 8 years later, he moved to Monsanto's World Headquarters in St. Louis. While with Monsanto, he was instrumental in developing a promotional strategy with textile mills that featured four television specials a year that showcased the talents of such stars as Anne Bancroft, Tony Bennett, Carol Channing, Arthur Fiedler, Dick Van Dyke and Mary Tyler Moore, among others.

M. James Robertson

While with Monsanto, Robertson was also responsible for international communications that involved travel to Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Europe, Japan, Korea and Australia, evaluating agencies and personnel and making sure programs and projects were on strategy.

Robertson attributes his success in large part to his education in North Dakota, starting in a one-room schoolhouse in Walsh County, where an early event helped shape the rest of his life.

"I was promoted to second grade during my first grade year, so I was a third grader after my first year of school. When I graduated from high school, I was 16. My friends went into the military, and I had to wait. Most recently, when my friends started retiring, I was too young to retire."

Robertson was born in Grand Forks in 1927, but spent the first 14 years of his life on a farm in Walsh County before his folks moved to Grand Forks and then to East Grand Forks. He graduated from Central High School in Grand Forks.

But it was his time at UND that Robertson says gave him an edge in the business world. He attended the University during the post World War II environment of "relative youngsters like myself and married vets -- there was a total student body at that time of less than 2,000." He cited Tom Clifford, then teaching accounting, and Henry Tomasek, in political science, as influences.

An industrious student who took night classes, day classes and correspondence study, Robertson pushed ahead to graduate as early as possible. Still, he had time for extra-curricular activities, such as Dakota Playmakers, the Dakota Annual, the Dakota

Student, the Stockwell Oratory Contest and debate. He also had time for Greek life. "I think one of my most enjoyable semesters I had was when I was consul at Sigma Chi."

"The premiums on personal relationships and skills have certainly helped me much in my work where I needed to communicate with people and earn their respect. Those skills matured here at the University."

A loyal alumnus, Robertson served a stint as president of the New York alumni organization, rubbing elbows with the likes of Chester Fritz and John Hancock, '03. In fact, John Hancock was one of the first people Robertson saw in 1950 after graduating from New York University with a master's degree in marketing.

"I was ushered into Hancock's office the first time I met him. I had a five-year plan for success that I told him about, and he said, 'Young man, my best advice is stay flexible.' He was right."

Sometime later, Robertson found out that Hancock wasn't all business: he learned Hancock held the record for catching the largest tuna caught in Liverpool, Nova Scotia -- something in the neighborhood of 790 pounds, according to Robertson.

Robertson also played a role in tracking down the sometimes elusive Chester Fritz, who donated and bequeathed millions of dollars to UND for the Chester Fritz Library and the Chester Fritz Auditorium.

In 1969, Robertson was awarded the Sioux Award, the UND Alumni Association's highest honor. "I figure the main reason I got it was that I helped find Chester Fritz."

Robertson continues to keep close contact with UND alums. He was instrumental in organizing the Class of '49 reunion at the 1989 Homecoming, and keeps tabs on classmates around the world.

Robertson and his wife, Margie, live in Warsaw Woods, Mo., where he is an alderman and is very involved as a director on the executive committees of the Kirkwood-Webster YMCA, the St. Louis Area March of Dimes, the Gateway Chapter of the National Agri-Marketing Assoc., and as a director of Solutions Magazine.

Distinguished UND alumni receive honorary degrees

The University of North Dakota awarded four honorary degrees at its spring commencement ceremonies May 12 and 13.

Three degrees were presented to distinguished members of the UND alumni family.

The fourth degree was awarded to Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, Houston, Texas, a heart surgeon, medical inventor and professor of Medicine at Baylor University. DeBakey is a leading pioneer in advanced heart surgery techniques, including transplantation. He received the honorary Doctor of Science degree, and also delivered the address at the UND Medical School Commencement.

Bruce E. McArthur, El Prado, N.M., was presented with the honorary Doctor of Engineering degree. McArthur, a 1939 UND graduate in electrical engineering, is an engineer, entrepreneur and pioneer developer of modern induction heating technology.

Robert Mautz, Salt Lake City, Utah, is former partner with Ernst and Whinney accounting firm, a retired professor of accounting at the University of Illinois and author of 15 books on accounting theory. Mautz, a 1937 UND graduate in commerce, received the honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Frank Wenstrom, Williston, N.D., former North Dakota lieutenant governor and long-time member of the State Senate, received the honorary Doctor of Laws degree. Among the many highlights of his career include serving as president of North Dakota's second constitutional convention. The UND Library for Student Research of State Government is named in honor of Wenstrom.

McCabe receives Clifford Outstanding Freshman award

Chad McCabe, center, a Bismarck native majoring in public administration, was honored this spring with the Thomas J. Clifford Outstanding Freshman Award. This award recognizes the freshman student who best exemplifies the highest academic standards and demonstrates leadership through participation in university and extra-curricular activities and/or community service. McCabe's activities include being a West Hall resident assistant, a political campaign worker, a member of the University Curriculum Committee and a bass clarinetist with the University Band. He also has been involved in wildlife preservation activities, the International Order of DeMolay, Toastmasters International and the Easter Seals Telethon. University of North Dakota researchers and students have greatly expanded computing capabilities at their fingertips, thanks to an AT&T computer equipment donation valued at more than $100,000.

AT&T has donated a 3B2/1000 UNIX System V minicomputer system to UND's Department of Computer Sciences, part of the Center for Aerospace Sciences. The grant also includes a 650-line-per-minute printer, 31 terminals, auxiliary equipment and software.

"We think this donation is tremendous," said UND President Thomas J. Clifford. "This system is significant because it provides our students with a variety of unique educational opportunities, and allows our researchers to work together and share information in a way they've never been able to do before."

The significance of the AT&T donation is that UNIX System V will now be available to faculty and students, according to Lonny Winrich, chairman of UND's computer sciences department.

"UNIX System V is an operating system designed to communicate with a lot of different machines," Winrich said. "It's an important thing to have because we're on the verge of bringing all of our different systems together. This is a capability that has not been available before at UND."

Among the advantages to having the system on campus, Winrich said, is the availability of public domain (free) software developed for use under UNIX. This allows students to make use of that software.

"AT&T has a special relationship with the University of North Dakota," said Rick Buysens, data branch manager for AT&T Computer Systems. "I'm sure that Jim Olson would have been pleased to see AT&T be a partner with UND as it strives to provide state-of-the-art technology to its students and faculty."

AT&T established the James E. Olson Memorial Endowment through the University of North Dakota Foundation in 1988 to honor the former AT&T chairman and chief executive officer and 1950 UND alumnus. He died in 1988.

UND was one of 47 institutions of higher learning to be selected for equipment grants from AT&T.

The award is part of AT&T's University Equipment Donation Program, which has given more than $200 million to colleges and universities since its inception.

In the good ol' summertime

Summertime on the University of North Dakota campus means green grass and leaves on the trees, bright flowers in bloom everywhere, and shorts and sandals on students. When they're not in summer school classrooms many students take advantage of UND's picturesque campus by spending many hours outdoors. This couple enjoys a beautiful summer day with a canoe ride down the English Coulee. Other students study on the lawn under shady trees or enjoy a walk, run or ride down campus bike paths.

Faculty, staff receive honors, awards

Several University of North Dakota faculty and staff members have recently been honored for their contributions to academia, the community and their alma maters.

A leading Hemingway scholar and an artist whose water colors and paints are regularly exhibited in galleries across the nation were honored as Chester Fritz Distinguished Professors during UND spring commencement ceremonies in May.

Dr. Robert W. Lewis, who joined the UND English faculty in 1969, and Brian O. Paulsen, who has been on the faculty of the Department of Visual Arts since 1973, both received $2,000 stipend.

The Chester Fritz Professorships were established with an endowment gift from the late UND benefactor Chester Fritz, who died in 1983 at the age of 91. Fritz attended UND from 1908 to 1910, later becoming an international trader in precious metals. Although he lived most of his life in China and Europe, Fritz is buried in Grand Forks.

Lewis holds a Ph.D. from the University of Illinois, is former president of the international Hemingway Society, chairs the board of directors of the Hemingway Foundation and serves on the editorial board of The Hemingway Review. At UND he has served as chairman of the English Department and is credited with shaping the department's Ph.D. program and with encouraging creativity in his colleagues. He has served as editor-in-chief of the North Dakota Quarterly since 1981.

Paulsen holds a Master of Fine Arts degree from Washington State University and has developed a national reputation as an artist's artist who manages to create 20 or more new paintings a year despite a heavy teaching load. He has received several awards for his work, including a prestigious National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship Grant. In 1989, his paintings were exhibited at 45 juried shows around the country.

A total of 20 past and present UND faculty members have to date been designated Chester Fritz Distinguished Professors.

George W. Schubert, Dean of University College and Summer Sessions at UND was recently honored by his alma mater, the University of Wisconsin-LaCrosse, with the Maurice O. Graff Distinguished Alumnus Award.

The award is given annually to individuals who have, through their relationships with the UW-L, brought distinction to themselves and to that institution. Schubert attended the University of Wisconsin-LaCrosse from 1958 to 1962, completing a Bachelor of Science degree.

In 1965, Schubert came to the University of North Dakota as an instructor in speech pathology and was promoted to assistant professor in 1968, associate professor in 1973, and professor in 1977. He served as chair of the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology from 1976 to 1978, at which time he was selected dean of University College and, in 1979, Summer Sessions was added to his responsibilities. Schubert also serves as the faculty athletic representative, a position he has held since 1973.

Bruce Gjovig, Director of the Center for Innovation & Business Development at UND, recently received the Outstanding UND Greek Alumnus Award, a highly honored Greek recognition awarded by the UND Interfraternity Council (IFC) and the UND Panhellenic Council (Panhel).

A 1974 graduate of UND, Gjovig was nominated for the honor by his undergraduate "brothers" from Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

Gjovig distinguished himself on a number of tasks in the past and present to qualify for the prestigious award. He served as chairman of the Alumni IFC from 1983 to 1985, was recruited again in 1989 to resurrect that group, and currently serves as chairman.

As chairman of the Alumni IFC, he chaired the committee to bring lower cost steamheat from UND to 700 Greeks in chapter houses, and led the support for the expansion/colonization of new fraternities on campus.

He is a recognized national expert on educational foundations, and has helped several fraternities start their own.

In 1984, he founded, and is currently the director of, the Center for Innovation & Business Development at UND, only the eighth such center in the United States. It was the first time in North Dakota that an effort was made to use the resources of higher education to help diversify the state's economy through entrepreneurship and manufacturing start-ups.

Mae Marie Blackmore, Director of the University Children's Center at UND, appeared on the front cover of the April issue of Child Care Information Exchange magazine. The publication called her "one of the true pioneers in the campus child care movement."

Blackmore graduated from UND in 1947 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Dietetics/Nutrition. In 1978, she received her Masters in Education majoring in Elementary Education and Early Childhood Education.

Her career in child care began when she became supervisor of the UND Nursery School in 1959 and held that position until 1972. That year she became director of the University Children's Center at UND, a position she will relinquish upon her retirement this August.

Blackmore has been a leader in the child care movement on national, midwest, state and local levels. In recognition of her contributions to the child care movement, she received the Ruth Meiers Service to Children Award in 1989.

UND Foundation receives gifts from friends and alumni

The University of North Dakota Foundation announces three new gifts from alumni and friends.

Maud M. Dickinson, '26, long-time resident of Washington, D.C., and most recently of Grand Forks, North Dakota, has established the Dickinson Family Endowment within the University of North Dakota Foundation to honor her pioneer parents, George Gerald and Maud Stevens Dickinson.

Family members, Harry E. Dickinson of Grand Forks, N.D. and Linda A. Dickinson of Tempe, Ariz., have also participated in initial contributions to the endowment.

George and Maud Stevens Dickinson were born in Wisconsin and moved to Dakota Territory in the early 1880s. George Dickinson was a lifelong farmer, businessman, and public-spirited citizen.

Maud Stevens Dickinson was a teacher and homemaker who, while rearing their six children, also took an interest in participating in many community activities. Not having the opportunity for higher education, both Dickinsons were committed to giving their children the best schooling they could. Of the six, they produced three UND graduates and encouraged and aided the others in educations suited to their interests.

Over three generations, nine of their direct descendants have graduated from UND. Others have attended for short periods, and still others have degrees, including three doctorates, from other institutions. Children of the pioneer Dickinsons who were graduates are Henry "Harry" Everts Dickinson, '08, Marion D. Lindesmith, '12 (Marion was honored in 1989 as one of the two oldest living UND alumni and is now the oldest living graduate); and Maud M. Dickinson, '26.

The second generation of graduates were the three children of Henry: Maud D. Wood, '34; Harriet Elaine D. Mrachek, '37; and Harry Everts Dickinson, '47, of Grand Forks, whose wife Lorraine (Marken), '50, also attended UND.

The third generation includes the two daughters of Harry and Lorraine, Nancy D. Lee, '67, and Linda Dickinson, '80; and a third great-granddaughter of the pioneer couple, Deborah H. Jones, '71, daughter of Earl and Claris D. Huffman of Minnewaukan.

The extended family has provided two members of the University faculty. The first was Marcia Bisbee, 1898, 1900, cousin of Maud Stevens Dickinson. After graduation, she became a chemistry instructor and, under the guidance of Earle J. Babcock, performed the initial experiments in pottery making from North Dakota clay that led to the creation of the Ceramics Department.

She made the first known pottery pieces, three of which were exhibited at the World's Fair in St. Louis in 1904. These are now the initial pieces in the Cable Ceramics Exhibit given by Maud Dickinson with several other pre-Cable pieces given by Marion Lindesmith.

A second and present faculty member is Dr. Lawrence L. Loendorf, professor and chairman of the Anthropology and Archeology Department, great-g grandson of the pioneer Dickinsons, and son of a granddaughter, Phoebe Loendorf, and her late husband L.F. Loendorf. Dr. Loendorf's wife, Paula (Tweten), '70, is director of Communication Support Services at the University.

Income from the Dickinson Family Endowment will be allocated for priority needs within the College of Arts and Sciences with preference for the Department of Anthropology and Archeology as long as Dr. Loendorf remains on the faculty.

Contributions to the Dickinson Family Endowment can be made through the UND Foundation.

The members of the Omer A. Brown family have established the Omer A. Brown Family Endowment within the UND Foundation.

Income from the endowment will be made available to assist UND students who have encountered an unfortunate and uncontrollable crisis situation. Recipients must be in good academic standing and have a high potential to achieve their goals.

Omer Allison Brown, a Gillingham, Wis. native, served in the U.S. Air Force from 1941-1945. While stationed in Grand Forks, Omer met Donna Young, whom he later married on Sept. 2, 1963 while stationed in Colorado Springs, Colo. After his honorable discharge as a Technical Sergeant, Omer and his wife lived briefly in Wisconsin before moving to Grand Forks.

In 1946, Brown attended and graduated from Moler Barber College in Fargo, N.D., and opened Brown's Barber Shop in Grand Forks in 1957.

Until his death in 1975, Brown's record of community service was outstanding. He was the Exalted Ruler of the Grand Forks Elks Lodge, a past commander of the Veteran's of Foreign Wars Post 1874, a member of Acacia Lodge No. 4, the Scottish Rite, American Legion Post No. 6, and United Lutheran Church. He also held the positions of president of the local Barber's Union and director of the North Dakota Barber's Association.

Although Brown did not attend a college or university, he recognized the importance of education. It was not unusual for him to provide support and encouragement to UND students who had met some form of adversity, and for this reason his family is honoring him through this endowment.

The Memorial Achievement Award in honor of Philip B. Vogel by Myron and Frances Bright and Legal Education Fund, Inc., a non-profit educational foundation, has been established through the UND Foundation.

The scholarship is given to the entering third-year UND law student who had the largest grade point average increase from his or her first to second year in law school.

Philip B. Vogel received a law degree from UND in 1934. Considered one of North Dakota's leading lawyers, he practiced law for 40 years in Fargo, N.D., until his death in 1977. His wife, Barbara, (Ince), '33, is also deceased.

Myron H. Bright served in the U.S. Army Air Corps for four years prior to receiving his law degree from the University of Minnesota in 1947.

Bright practiced law in Fargo for 21 years and was a law associate of Vogel's. In 1968, President Lyndon B. Johnson appointed him to the federal bench where he served as a U.S. Senior Circuit judge until his retirement in 1985.

A longtime friend of the University of North Dakota, Bright donated his judicial correspondence, official documents, and his working papers to the University's Chester Fritz Library in 1984.

3M presents research grant

The McKnight Foundation, which is administered by the 3M Corporation, has presented a $10,000 grant to the University of North Dakota. The grant will be used for basic research in the Chemistry Department. Dr. Ron Zigman, technical director for the 3M Specialty Chemicals Division, presented the grant during a visit to UND this spring. Zigman was honored at a luncheon at the J. Lloyd Stone Alumni Center during his campus visit. Pictured from left are Wes Christenson, UND coordinator of foundation and corporate relations; Dave Miedema, UND Foundation senior development officer; Zigman; Lewis Radonovich, chairman of the UND Chemistry Department; and Dave Vorland, executive director of University Advancement.

Realtors give gift to Finance Department

Appreciated property offers unique gift opportunities

By Dave Miedema
Senior Development Officer

As the UND Foundation begins another fiscal year of continued growth and support for the University of North Dakota, it is interesting to note the dramatic increase in the number of alumni and friends who are enjoying the advantages of gifting appreciated property. Just as there are tax advantages for gifts of cash, the tax laws provide even more incentives for gifts of property to charitable organizations such as the UND Foundation. Individuals who own appreciated property should be aware of the unique gift opportunities which exist, since these types of gifts will often fit well into an individual's financial plan.

Simply put, appreciated property is an asset with a current market value greater than its original purchase price. Most frequently, stocks, bonds and land fall into this category. The appreciated value of an investment is most often represented in large part as "paper profit," or capital gain.

Although property may have appreciated handsomely over a period of time, it may not necessarily generate a significant return for the owner. A natural consideration in this situation would be to liquidate the property and reinvest in a higher yielding asset. More often than not, though, this idea is quickly squelched after owners realize the capital gains tax consequences.

Naturally, one option for this situation would be no action at all—namely hold on to the asset, receive less income than you feel there is potential for, and pay no capital gains tax on the appreciation. Another option which is often advantageous is a planned giving arrangement with the UND Foundation.

Increase your income (a portion of which can be tax-free), avoid or substantially mitigate the capital gains tax on your paper profit, and receive an immediate charitable contribution deduction by gifting appreciated property. Sound interesting? All of these benefits are available with an arrangement through the UND Foundation, plus, Donors receive the satisfaction of being part of the ongoing growth and development of the University of North Dakota.

Gifts of appreciated property such as stocks or bonds can be made outright, or in exchange for income. When an outright gift is made, the capital gains tax is avoided on the appreciation portion of the property, plus you (or your estate, in the case of a testamentary gift) receive a charitable deduction for the full market value of the property. The combination of these tax advantages significantly reduce the "cost" of a planned gift to the UND Foundation.

Funding a charitable income arrangement with appreciated property is becoming increasingly popular with members of our alumni family. Such arrangements can be particularly tax-wise, allowing Donors to to a $21,000 tax liability. If, on the other hand, Mr. D were to directly gift the stock to the UND Foundation in exchange for a life income arrangement, such as a charitable remainder unitrust with a 7% payout, this is what he could expect. First of all, he would bypass the $21,000 tax bill. Second, his income in the first year would increase from $2,000 to $7,000. There also exists high potential for his income to increase each successive year. Third, he would receive an immediate charitable tax deduction of nearly $55,000 which could directly save him up to $15,400 in income taxes. This deduction can be claimed in the year of the gift and any unused deduction amount can be carried forward for up to five additional years if necessary. Deductions for gifts of appreciated property such as this can not exceed an amount equal to 30% of adjusted gross income.

If you would like additional information on how gifting appreciated property might fit within your plans, please write or call our office and request our complimentary booklet, "The Magic of Gifts of Appreciated Property." All inquiries remain confidential.

Foundation Corner

divest themselves of low-return, highly appreciated property, in exchange for income, either for life or a term of years.

To illustrate, assume Mr. D, now age 75, purchased stock ten years ago at a cost of $25,000. Since then, he has received annual dividend income equal to approximately 2% of its fair market value which is now $100,000. If Mr. D (who is in a 28% tax bracket) were to sell the stock hoping to reinvest in a higher return asset, he would be immediately responsible for the tax on the $75,000 capital gain. In this illustration, this would amount
