chology as an essential for law reform, and suggested a credo for the members of the profession, as follows:

"I will join with my adversary in waiving a jury trial wherever and whenever it can possibly be done without the sacrifice of a fundamental right.

"I will join with my adversary in supporting a trial justice in fair comment upon the evidence and reasonable direction to a jury on the facts.

"I will join with my adversary in fair concession of undisputed facts.

"I will not put an adversary to his proof in respect to facts whose existence my client admits.

"I will refrain from merely formal or technical objection to the admission of evidence.

"I will co-operate with the trial justice and my adversary to secure a speedy, prompt and complete presentation of the facts of the case.

"I will neither make nor oppose interlocutory motions unless they are of real and practical importance.

"I will take no appeal unless I am satisfied that substantial error has been committed and that a new trial should reasonably give a different result."
